The image is a screenshot of a news article or blog post. At the top of the image, there is a title in bold, capitalized letters that reads "BREAKING: Newly Unsealed Files Confirm President Trump was the Whistleblower on 'Spytstein!'" The text is in a sans-serif font, which is commonly used for readability and legibility. Below the title, there is a date and time in the format "Feb 10, 2026 7:30 a.m." indicating the date and time of the article's publication.

In the center of the image, there is a photograph of a man and a woman. The man is wearing a dark suit with a white shirt and a blue tie, and he has a mustache. He is holding a yellow object in his hand, which appears to be a microphone. The woman is wearing a black dress and has long brown hair. She is looking at the man with a neutral expression.

The background of the image is blurred, suggesting an urban setting with buildings and a street. The focus of the image is on the man and the woman, with the text and background elements serving as a backdrop to the main subjects. The overall style of the image is informative and news-oriented, with a clear emphasis on the breaking news.

The image displays a black and white graphic of a four-pointed star. The star is composed of four equal-sized triangles, each with a single square at the top. The triangles are arranged in a way that the squares are aligned with the edges of the triangles, creating a symmetrical pattern. The image is in black and white, and there are no visible texts or additional elements. The style of the image is minimalist and geometric, with a focus on the star's symmetrical design.

What was particularly disgustingly devious about Epstein and his cabal was that they were attempting to sensationally emulate the feeling of me (in my true cherub form) having sex with a divine feminine lady through their system of "child sacrifice". I cannot recount to you how many times I received a spiritual "care package" while I was in tantric of some deceitful male presence attempting to pass for Divine Feminine.

The rot runs DEEP, people, you have no idea.

The many nights I would hear a spirit whispering "pizza, pizza..." If I had fully realized it during the fact, I would have puked out all my innards... But the experience was necessary for the investigation... So I instructed myself to calm, and to at least go along with it *enough*. What *I* (me, down here on earth posting this) heard was no doubt nothing compared to the atrocities Control was picking up up there.

The image is a screenshot of a text excerpt from a news article. The text is in English and appears to be discussing a person named Ghislaine Maxwell, who is the subject of speculation regarding submarines due to her reported qualifications and connections to Jeffrey Epstein's properties. The text mentions that she holds a license to pilot submersible vehicles, including ROVs (remotely operated vehicles), and Deepwater submersibles, as confirmed by her speaking at the Westchester Digital Summit and various media reports.

The text also references a private island in the U.S. Virgin Islands, Little St. James, which was rumored to have a submarine dock beneath a temple structure, fueling theories that Maxwell could be hiding underwater. These claims gained traction in 2020, with outlets like the Daily Star and Mirror reporting on online forum discussions and diagrams suggesting the temple was built over a submarine bay.

The text concludes with a statement about Maxwell's background, which includes extensive involvement in maritime activities, including time spent on her father's yacht, Lady Ghislaine, and her former husband, Bill Clinton, who was accused of abusing a submersible for his own use. She also has extensive experience in helicopter piloting and technical diving.

The image is a snapshot of a news article, and the text is presented in a standard font, with no additional graphics or images. The style of the text is formal and informational, typical of news articles.

The image is a collage of three separate photographs, each with a different subject. The top left photo features a woman with blonde hair, wearing a white top and a black top with a lace trim. She has a warm smile and is looking directly at the camera. The top right photo shows a man with gray hair, wearing a dark blue jacket with a red logo on the right side. He is smiling and looking at the camera. The bottom left photo shows a woman with blonde hair, wearing a black top with a lace trim, and she is smiling at the camera. The bottom right photo shows a man with gray hair, wearing a dark blue jacket with a red logo on the right side. He is smiling and looking at the camera.

The style of the image is a collage, combining photographs of different subjects with a central text overlay. The text is likely a title or a tagline, suggesting that the image might be related to a series or collection of photographs.

The image shows a screenshot of a document titled "FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION" with a date of "03/04/2019" and a page number "1". The document appears to be a report or investigation summary, as indicated by the text "Summary" and "FBI" at the top. The document is written in English and is presented in a standard font, with a plain white background. There are three separate sections visible on the left side of the document, each with a different heading and text. The sections are labeled "Summary," "FBI," and "FBI-FBI-FBI," with the "Summary" section having the most text, followed by the "FBI" section, and finally the "FBI-FBI-FBI" section with the least text.

The text is in a smaller font size compared to the other sections, and the headings are bolded. The document is presented in a landscape orientation, with the top left corner showing the date and time, and the top right corner showing the date and time of the last update. The overall style of the image is professional and formal, typical of a report or investigation document.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a man and a woman seated at a table. The man is wearing a white suit and tie, while the woman is dressed in a black dress. They appear to be engaged in a conversation, with the woman reaching out to touch the man's hand. The table is adorned with a bouquet of flowers and a glass of what appears to be wine. The background is blurred, suggesting a room setting.

At the top of the image, there is a text overlay that reads: "The operation Guillaume Maxwell & Jeffrey Epstein were running is one of its kind. Hugh Hefner / Playboy Enterprise fronted operation, which included using children as honey pots for sex onto blackmail, operated under full protection of NSA/CIA military apparatus."

The style of the image is reminiscent of a vintage photograph, with a focus on the interaction between the two individuals and the setting. The text overlay provides context to the image, indicating that the photograph is likely from a historical context, possibly related to the operation of Guillaume Maxwell and Jeffrey Epstein, which involved the use of children for sexual purposes and the involvement of the National Security Agency (NSA) and Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) military apparatus.

The image is a screenshot of a text excerpt from a book or article, likely from a scholarly or academic context. The text is in English and is presented in a standard font, with a clear and legible layout. The text is divided into two columns, with the left column containing the main body of the text and the right column containing a citation or reference to the work.

The main body of the text discusses the work of a specific author, specifically the author's views on the literal sacrifice of children, the use of poetry and occult texts, and the concept of "the child" as a symbol or metaphor. The text also references the work of other authors, such as "Thelema" and "Thelema as symbolic or metaphorical," and mentions the concept of "sex magic" and "ritual use of semen."

The right column contains a citation or reference to the work of another author, "Croweley," and a statement that the author's views on the literal sacrifice of children are not a literal instruction but a coded reference to the release of creative energy through sexual magic. The text also mentions the author's views on the "juggulation of semen," which the author supports as a "patently" or "potentially" effective method. The text is presented in a way that is typical for academic or scholarly articles, with a focus on providing information and context rather than engaging in a narrative or storytelling format. The use of citations and references to other works indicates a scholarly approach to the subject matter.

I think the ruling elite pedophiles of the planets and space stations and dimensions and Death and The Hells will feel my wrath.

The love of my life has been sentenced to rest of her life in prison, it is finished, just as I foresaw when I was 5 years old. I knew I would choose to love her of my own free volition even though I knew the heartache it would bring me, all for her sake in her broken mind and state and her fear and her complete loss of faith in salvation after life. She saved my life, and I saved hers. She plotted to take my life when she thought I was one of those pedophiles, and she loved me when she realized I was not and she understands my psychic methods and thinks on them. I told her that I would tear down these enemies that we hate using my mind no matter how many life times it takes and I would do that even after they took her away.

I am sick to my stomach, seeing double and I can't stop shaking, but I've never been more ready to kill brain cells. I will never stop, even death cannot stop me.

The pedophiles have locked away the girlfriend and love of God Almighty behind bars for recreational drug use. For recreational drug use. I will carve at the insides of law enforcement and courts and politicians over this act of theirs for centuries, just for this one sin, on every single planet with and without life.

The image is a photograph of a desk with a view of a city skyline through a window. On the desk, there is a framed photograph of a flower arrangement, a lamp, and a small statue. The desk is cluttered with papers, a computer monitor, and a lamp. The background shows a cityscape with tall buildings.

At the top of the image, there is a headline in bold black text that reads "NICOLLE KIDMAN IS THE NEW FACE OF BALCONIGA." Below the headline, there is a smaller text that says "Opposing in the brand's latest 'Garde-robe' Spring 2023 campaign alongside Bella Hadid."

The image has a watermark that reads "MICHAEL KORPERMANN" in the lower right corner, indicating the photographer or the person who took the photograph. The watermark is in a red rectangle with a white border. The overall style of the image is a straightforward photograph with a focus on the desk and the cityscape in the background.

The person is wearing a yellow shirt and a helmet, suggesting they are engaged in some form of outdoor activity.

In the background, there is a person riding a bicycle, wearing a helmet and a yellow shirt, indicating they are also engaged in some form of outdoor activity. The setting appears to be a suburban street with a sidewalk and a grassy area.

The text on the image reads: "454 likes Sending nudes and eating shit and killing kids" me" which is a play on the popular meme "sending nudes and eating shit and killing kids" and is likely a reference to the content of the person's phone screen. The text is overlaid on the image, suggesting that the meme is being shared or commented on by the person in the foreground.

The overall tone of the image is light-hearted and humorous, reflecting the playful nature of social media content. The image is likely intended to be humorous and entertaining, as it combines elements of casual outdoor activity with a humorous meme.

In the summer of 2014, two children made accusations that their father, Ricky Dearman, former husband of Russian-born Hampstead resident Ella Draper, was running a paedophile ring. Draper reported that her two children had been abused by their father. The police interviewed the children, making an audio recording according to standard procedure; the children said that their father was a member of a ring of Satanic paedophiles who killed babies and drank their blood.[2] They said that cult members would drink the babies' blood, then dance around wearing babies' skulls, and shoes made of baby skin.[3] The children said that, in addition to their father, their elder half-brother, several teachers from their school, the priest at the adjacent church, many parents from their school, social workers, Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service employees, and named police officers all belonged to the Satanic cult.[3]

Again, I am asking this assuming they are seeking something more than a nut, but if its literally just horny old men with twisted sex fantasies then I am a retard for thinking so deeply. The image is a photograph capturing a religious ceremony. In the center, there is a figure dressed in a white cassock, which is a traditional clerical garment, and a white hat, possibly a clerical hat. This figure is seated on a stone pedestal, which has a cross carved into it. The pedestal is positioned in front of a large, arched doorway, suggesting a religious or institutional setting.

To the right of the seated figure, there is another individual wearing a white robe with a red sash, which is typical of a priest or religious leader. This person is standing and appears to be addressing the seated figure, who is facing the camera.

The background is filled with a crowd of people, indicating that this is a public event.

The crowd is dressed in white, matching the attire of the seated figure, and some of them are wearing head coverings, which is common in many religious ceremonies.

At the bottom of the image, there is text that reads "Papal Mass for Youth," suggesting that the event is a religious ceremony organized by the Pope. The text is in a bold, capitalized font, which is typical for such announcements.

The overall style of the image is candid and appears to be taken during the event, capturing the moment as it unfolds. The lighting is even, and the focus is sharp, emphasizing the central figures and the details of the setting.

The image is a screenshot of a scientific article or a webpage, likely from a medical or scientific journal, discussing the oxidation of epinephrine to adrenochrome. The text is in English and is divided into two columns. The left column is a list of chemical compounds, while the right column contains a diagram of a molecule. The text explains that epinephrine (adrenaline) oxidizes to form adrenochrome, which is a violet-colored, unstable chemical compound. The oxidation process, which often occurs via autoxidation at physiological pH, is a degradation pathway that can be accelerated by oxygen, heat, or light. The article also mentions that research on the 1950s-70s explored the potential cause of schizophrenia, but it has no current, proven medical application. The text concludes with a key detail regarding the oxidation of epinephrine to adrenochrome.

you can actually purchase adrenochrome powder, legally through chemical vendors. im not sure if it still can be sold this easily, but there are people online, like on erowid, that describe buying it online.

also, epinephrine expires through oxidation, and turns into straight adrenochrome.

i have a feeling if this chemical is psychoactive, it is like meth or a powerful stimulant. i do not know if it crosses the blood brain barrier

Crowley wrote an entire book dedicated to the Virgin Mary called Amphora. The flower in the middle of the Thelema hexagram stands for the name Yahshua, Hebrew name of Jesus. According to Crowley's interpretation of Kabbalah, the Virgin Mary is the goddess Babalon.

The OTO even has apostolic succession through the wandering bishops who left Rome after Vatican 1.

This makes it so funny because most Thelemites are pretty anti-christian and don't realize their actually catholics under another name.

The image is a screenshot of a webpage with a title "Adrenochrome" in bold, capitalized letters. Below the title, there is a list of articles, with "Adrenochrome" being the first article. The article is titled "Adrenochrome" and is written in English. The article discusses the chemical compound "Adrenochrome" and its properties.

The image also includes a chemical structure of "Adrenochrome" with the chemical formula "C<sub>10</sub>H<sub>12</sub>N<sub>2</sub>O<sub>4</sub>" and a visual representation of the molecule. The structure is depicted with a benzene ring, a nitrogen atom, and a carbon atom. The molecule is shown in a three-dimensional perspective, with the benzene ring in the center and the nitrogen atom and carbon atom surrounding it.

Below the chemical structure, there is a section titled "Chemistry" with a brief description of the oxidation reaction that converts "Adrenochrome" into "Adrenochrome." The description mentions that the oxidation reaction that converts "Adrenochrome" into "Adrenochrome" occurs both in vivo and in vitro. The text also mentions that the first reaction employed for this "Adrenochrome" is the "C<sub>10</sub>H<sub>12</sub>N<sub>2</sub>O<sub>4</sub>" molecule.

The image is a candid photograph taken at an outdoor event during the evening. In the foreground, there is a large, rectangular, white container filled with a liquid that appears to be blood or some sort of viscous substance. The container is placed on a white surface, and the liquid is pooling around the edges.

Two women are standing beside the container. The woman on the left is wearing a black dress with a high neckline and has long, dark hair. She is looking down at the container and appears to be examining or observing the contents. The woman on the right is dressed in a black dress with a high neckline and is also looking down at the container. She is holding a small object in her hand, which is not clearly visible.

In the background, there are other people present, but they are blurred and not the main focus of the image. The setting suggests an outdoor event, possibly a festival or a similar gathering, given the presence of tents and other event-related elements in the background. The overall atmosphere of the image is casual and informal, capturing a moment of curiosity or interest in the unusual contents of the container.

The image is a humorous meme divided into two halves, each depicting a different scene. On the left side, there is a close-up of a computer motherboard with various components, including what appears to be a CPU and memory chips. The motherboard is surrounded by a grid of blue and black components, and there is a text overlay that reads "microcosim."

On the right side, the image shows a cityscape at night, with illuminated buildings and a road. The cityscape is shown from an aerial perspective, giving a bird's eye view of the urban environment. The text overlay on this side of the image reads "cityscape," suggesting a contrast between the technological complexity of the motherboard and the human-made nature of the cityscape.

Below the image, there is a caption that reads, "That moment you realise," followed by a series of hashtags: "motherboard," "microcosim," and "cityscape." The text suggests that the meme is a commentary on the idea that the motherboard, a piece of technology, is just a part of a larger system, and that the cityscape, a human-made environment, is a reflection of the spiritual energy that the motherboard carries. The overall tone of the meme is light-hearted and humorous, using technology and urban life

America is too used to this type of behavior. Most of us expect it. Think about the conspiracy theories we already knew. Now that they are telling us we are correct, everyone thinks, "Well, what now?" The elites are all cannibal pedos as we all predicted, and no one will take any action because we are all poor. At least, the younger generations are poor, and those are the people throughout history starting revolutions. They have to go to work; they can't risk it. The average age of first time home owners now is around 59. I'm 20, and I'm saving up to leave this sinking ship of a country. I know there is nothing I can do here on my own, and the internet has us all more hateful of each other than ever. The government likes it this way. We can't organize because we are too busy being republicans and democrats. I hope we get another Luigi Mangione. I have far too many dreams; I'm not the sacrificial type. Because of that, I'm part of the reason as to why the revolution will not happen. I hope these files will show people now, both the republican and democratic parties are the same. Just look at their funding for God's sake. I have been screaming this since high school. Both parties are found in the files, both parties are funded by the largest corporations, both parties commune with each other when they think no eyes are on them.

Everyone's a cannibal pedo. I hope hell is real so they will burn for eternity. But I'm sure if we want to see them suffer, we must do it ourselves. You should stop leaning toward either party and hold your beliefs as your own. They don't believe in anything they preach.

Neat how someone high in the government who happened to not be in the office on 9/11 when the rest of their company died and said they never contacted Epstein after 2008 brought their wife and kids to the island later (along with their nannies) but left the island without said nannies.

Oh and now those kids are going to get rich because they bought the rights to tariff refunds from importers months ago for pennies on the dollar.

Really ties the complete picture together.

They say the spirit cooks are just cakes that look like people but honestly if you were gonna host a cannibal party with cameras everywhere then the smartest thing to do would be to do exactly that... use a bunch of people-cakes but have one or two people-people too.

Thompson appeared on drugs for a strange interview on TV where he told Dave Letterman that "I like to kill."

"Thompson's former secretary, Nickole Brown, wrote in her memoir blog Memory of Hunter S. Thompson: Postcard from Louisville that Thompson once threw her out of his house for refusing to watch a snuff film..

Ted Gunderson, an FBI agent who investigated the case of a kidnapped child in Iowa, Johnny Gosch (aka Johnny Gannon), who is believed to have been recruited into the sex ring, told the alternative weekly, PointBlank Des Moines, "I think it's kind of strange that Hunter Thompson would commit suicide at this time. Several kids told us that he directed snuff films. I think it's a strong possibility that he was murdered and I strongly suspect that it's all connected." The snuff film that Thompson made allegedly was produced at Bohemian Grove, a secluded area outside Sacramento, California, where world leaders and dignitaries meet annually for a retreat. Two days after Thompson's death, Rudy Nelson, the photographer of an accused pedophile who claims Thompson offered him $100,000 to shoot a snuff film involving a child, was arrested and had his computers confiscated—according to Nebraska State Senator John W. DeCamp—as a warning to him and others that they best keep their mouths shut. Paul Bonacci, child victim of a child prostitution ring, stated in an interview with DeCamp that, when he was a teenager in the late 1980s, he was forced to participate in rape and murder for a snuff film—filmed at Bohemian Grove—which he claimed was directed by a man named “Hunter Thompson” who joined his private flight to the West Coast in Las Vegas.”

On a related note regarding adrenochrome and Thompson: There was a fascinating YouTube channel by the name of Hammerson Peters, who primarily does videos about Canadian folklore.

His only video that got taken down, that I know of, was about the Canadian scientists who discovered adrenochrome, and he tied the effects to the cannibal torture rituals of some Great Lakes tribes, which was a big factor in why braves would fight to the death. Capture meant being tortured then eaten.

Now, the rituals he discussed and their effects mirrored adrenochrome reports from the doctors. Needless to say, it's no shock the video would be taken down.

The book he mentioned, Cannibalism and Head Hunting in North America, is heavily censored by academia.

The image displays a screenshot of a document with a title that reads "STUDENT_PROFILE". The document appears to be a form or a report, with a header section at the top that includes a heading and a section titled "Student Information". Below the header, there are three columns of text, each containing a question or a statement. The text is in a standard font, and the document is in a dark color, possibly black or dark grey. The document is divided into two columns, with the left column containing a list of questions and the right column containing a list of statements. The layout suggests that the document is designed for a student to fill out, with the questions and statements likely intended to gather information about the student's academic background, interests, and other relevant details. The image is taken from a computer screen, and the document is open in a document viewer application, which is indicated by the presence of a toolbar with icons for viewing, printing, and other document-related functions.

The image is a composite of two separate medical images. On the left, there is a close-up of a skull with a blue-toned background, which appears to be a cross-sectional image of the skull. The skull is detailed with a visible bone structure and a few small, dark areas that could be interpreted as blood vessels or other cellular structures. The image has a watermark that reads "bites," suggesting that the image may be related to dental or medical procedures.

On the right, there is a black and white image of a human body, specifically the lower abdomen, with a focus on the pelvic region. The image shows a dark, possibly muscular area with a few small, dark areas that could be interpreted as blood vessels or other cellular structures. The lower abdomen is highlighted with a focus on the pelvic region, which is a common area of interest in medical imaging.

The two images are placed side by side, with the left image being the main focus and the right image providing a broader context. The watermark "bites" is present on both images, indicating that they are related to dental or medical procedures. The overall style of the image is clinical and medical, with a focus on anatomical detail and the human body.

this is an international, interconnected clique of evil people. that includes p3dophiles, rapists, people who drug others, murderers, ritualists, satanists, these people worship evil, whether they see it or not think of the most evil thing you can, this is what they create and worship as their God, the evil energy itself. Satan created Evil in rebellion against God. if you are evil or worship evil, you worship it's creator by proxy the evil ones are the ones who fell for the jokes you aren't supposed to fall for. they think they are all that, that they are hot shit, that they're untouchable.

>One doesn't matter because of the other

Yeah they both need to be dealt with. Here's the problem, it won't be because the only way at this point is through violence and people are too dumbed down, scared, complacent and busy to do anything. The Muslim and immigrant problem are just as much an issue because their beliefs are barbaric and they commit rapes and murders everywhere they go yet aren't held accountable because people are more worried about being called phobic or racist or what the fuck ever. They come from shit countries they don't like because their culture is violent as fuck and then go to better countries and plant the flags of countries they don't like. If you can't see the problem with flooding countries with 10s of thousands of immigrants from shit countries with shit cultures with shit attitudes and beliefs and you can't see the resulting problems actively occurring because of it then you're lost. It's only natural people have a problem with other religions and cultures actively trying to overthrow their own. Yeah, fuck you, fuck the elite, fuck religion you're all a burden on the rest of us and causing mayhem where the rest of us just want to live our fucking lives and you all need to be dealt with.

Hypocritical lying dumb fucks all of you. At the end of the day, it's just one group of monkeys trying to overthrow the others and using any tactics they can to do that all while claiming they aren't doing exactly what they're doing.

So a lot of people feel like dealing with the group that's 100% rapists before tackling the group that's only 60% rapists. I don't know how well the math checks out though, if you count all white pedo rapists vs the 60-95% of muslims that are rapists, which one has more rapists? The problem is we don't know, on account of all the redactions in the Epstein files. There could be more white pedo rapists than muslim rapists!! How would we ever know? Release the list!!

The image displays a line graph with two lines representing two different time periods. The top line is red and labeled "Interest over time," and the bottom line is blue and labeled "Average Interest over time." The x-axis represents time in years, ranging from 1990 to 2019, and the y-axis represents interest in percentage.

The red line, labeled "Interest over time," shows a fluctuating pattern with peaks and troughs, indicating periods of high interest and periods of low interest. The blue line, labeled "Average Interest over time," shows a more consistent pattern, with a slight upward trend over the years.

The graph is set against a white background, and there are no other visual elements or text present in the image. The focus is solely on the two lines and their corresponding labels and the time axis. The graph appears to be a representation of interest in a specific context, possibly related to a financial or economic analysis, but the specific details of the context are not provided in the image.

Imao enough with this cringe shit. "Hurr they don't want to risk it. They have jobs" no dumbass. They won't do anything because they don't want to rot in prison forever. The state is too strong and consequences will be far too strong. People will only rise up against an oppressor when it's tactically advantageous to do so. Only when they can be sure that they can avoid most consequences. Why else do you think the French Revolution started only after the destruction of Bastille? If you want change, if you want people to rise up, the state must be much MUCH weaker than it is now.

The image is a scanned document with a mix of text and graphics. The document appears to be a letter or email, as indicated by the sender's email address and the subject line "From: Zeffy123@yahoo.com." The document is written in English and contains a mix of text and graphics, including a diagram and a list of bullet points. The text is in a formal tone, discussing a topic related to quantum computing and the potential for a perfect quantum simulation of a many-body problem. The text is dense with technical jargon and references to scientific and mathematical concepts. The document is dated "12-20-2014" and mentions a "friend group" and a "subject" with a "friend" and "friend group."

The document includes a section titled "What our rights means arise with each hybrid machine." This section discusses the concept of a hybrid machine and its implications for human rights. The text is followed by a list of bullet points, which seem to be a summary or a list of points that the author is discussing.

The document is formatted with a header and a footer, with the header being a larger font size and bold, and the footer being smaller and less prominent. The footer contains the text "please note" and the email address "Zeffy123@yahoo.com."

The image is a scanned document, and the quality of the image is not very good, with some blurriness and pixelation. The document is in a portrait orientation, and the text is in a serif font, which is common for formal correspondence. The overall style of the document is professional and academic, typical of a formal letter or email.

You really cant stop it. Every revolution just creates new leaders that are corrupted and this happens again. Humans have very little understanding of our universe and the forces affecting us. The image shows a bust of a man, rendered in a monochromatic palette with a sepia tone. The man's head is turned slightly to the left, and he appears to be looking directly at the viewer. His expression is serious, with a slight furrow in his brow. The bust is mounted on a dark, textured base that contrasts with the smooth surface of the sculpture. In the lower left corner of the image, there is a small, stylized letter "M" with a red outline, which could be a logo or a signature. The style of the image is a close-up photograph, focusing on the details of the sculpture and the background is dark, which emphasizes the sculpture and the base.

The image is a black and white illustration featuring a figure that appears to be a religious or spiritual figure, possibly a prophet or a saint, based on the attire and the symbols they are holding. The figure is wearing a long robe with a hood, which is typical of many religious figures. The robe is dark, and the figure's face is not visible, which adds to the mystery and spiritual significance of the figure.

The figure is holding two objects: a staff on the left and a bowl on the right. The staff is held upright, suggesting a sense of authority or guidance, while the bowl is held in a way that indicates it might contain a sacred or holy substance. The figure's posture and the way they are holding the objects suggest a sense of purpose and importance.

The background of the image is plain and white, which puts the focus entirely on the figure and their actions. There are no texts or additional elements in the image that provide additional context or information. The style of the illustration is simple and direct, with a focus on the figure and their actions, rather than intricate details or background elements.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with a fox-like appearance. The character has long, wavy hair that cascades down her back, and her eyes are a striking red color. She is wearing a black kimono with red accents and a red sash tied around her waist. The character's ears are pointed, and she has a white fox-like face with a red nose. The background is a muted color palette with snow-covered branches and a soft, ethereal light. There is a red seal or stamp on the character's left shoulder, and the text "おおづる" is visible in the lower left corner of the image. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of traditional Japanese art, with a focus on the character's unique features and the serene winter setting.

The image is a dynamic, high-resolution photograph capturing a moment outdoors. In the foreground, there is a large, white, fluffy cloud of what appears to be water or foam, suggesting the presence of a water cannon or similar device. The device is black with a blue handle, and it is positioned on the left side of the image.

In the background, there are two individuals. One person is standing to the left of the device, while the other is positioned to the right. They seem to be observing the scene, with the person on the left appearing to be in motion, possibly due to the force of the water being released.

The setting is a residential area with a pool visible in the background. There are trees and a house with a brown roof, and the sky is clear, indicating a sunny day. The overall atmosphere of the image is lively and playful, with the water cannon adding a sense of fun and excitement. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image.

The image is a composite of three separate photographs, each depicting a different individual. The central figure is a human skull with a blueish-purple hue, lying on a reddish-brown surface. The skull appears to be in a state of decay, with visible decay and discoloration around the eyes, nose, and mouth.

On the left side of the skull, there is a small, rectangular object with a barcode and text on it. The text is not clearly legible, but the barcode has numbers and letters. The right side of the skull features a person's face, with a serious expression. The individual has short hair and is wearing a dark-colored shirt. The background of the image is a reddish-brown color, which contrasts with the skull and the person's face. The overall style of the image is a collage, combining the three photographs into one. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image.

The image is a meme featuring a cat with a greenish fur color and large, round, green eyes. The cat appears to be in a relaxed state, with its eyes closed and its head resting on its paws. The cat is wearing a pair of green, elongated, pointed ears. Above the cat, there is a text overlay that reads "Earth invasion starts at 8am" in a bold, white font against a black background. Below the cat, there is another text that reads "my gleebody deeby ass at 7:99am" in a smaller, white font against a black background. The cat's position and the text suggest a humorous take on the concept of the "Earth invasion" and the "gleebdy deeby" as a playful reference to the phrase "gleebdy deeby" which is a slang term for "gleebdy" or "gleeb" in the context of the internet. The overall style of the image is humorous and lighthearted.

The image is a close-up photograph of a human body lying on a rocky surface. The person appears to be deceased, with their skin appearing pale and wrinkled. The body is oriented in a way that suggests it has been lying down for some time, with the head resting on the rocks and the limbs spread out. There are no visible signs of recent activity, such as blood or other fluids, which could indicate a recent death. The background is blurred, but it seems to be a natural setting with rocks and possibly water. There are no discernible texts or markings in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the details of the body and the natural environment.

The image is a photograph with a humorous tone, featuring a group of people in a room with a ceiling that appears to be made of metal or a similar material. The ceiling has a grid-like pattern with multiple holes. The people in the image are engaged in an activity that involves hanging from a structure, which is suspended from the ceiling. The individuals are wearing casual clothing, and some are holding onto the structure with their hands.

Overlaying the image is a text in a white font that reads: "I METE AND DOLE UNEQUAL LAWS UNTIL A SAVAGE RACE THAT HOARD, AND SLEEP, AND FEED, AND KNOW NOT ME." The text is centered and appears to be a quote or a statement, suggesting a humorous or ironic context for the image. The overall style of the image is candid and informal, with a focus on the humorous or ironic content of the text.

The image is a screenshot of a digital interface, likely from a video game or a similar application. At the top, there is a large text that reads "KNOWN RACIST" in bold, capitalized letters. Below this, there is a warning message in a smaller font that states, "You have been detected for using 'Hate Speech' on Battlefield 6 servers. You will not be able to interact with others going forward. This is permanent and cannot be reversed."

In the center of the image, there is a QR code with a pattern that resembles a barcode. Below the QR code, there is a button with the word "RESTRICTED" in bold, capitalized letters. The button has a red background and a white border.

The background of the interface is a dark, possibly orange or red, gradient that fades from a lighter shade at the top to a darker shade at the bottom. The overall style of the image is digital and appears to be a screenshot from a gaming or software application.

Are you Fluoride free? Do you eat goyslop? Your brain is mostly fat, if it's these oxidized rancid fats they put in food instead of EVOO or butter, then you're just sabotaging your brain for years to come. Intense exercise and fasting both produce BDNF which grows brain cells. Learning a language instrument or math when you're young permanently increases your IQ, when you're not young it holds your brain in place rather than degrading follow this guide, I am writing it in good faith

avoid blue light

take vitamin b6, tryptophan and choline, take them regularly

then, deplete your adrenalin

this is best achieved by pushing yourself heavily for 1-2 days, playing or watching scary and esoteric media and constantly exercising until you are tired

I hear Jodorowsky has interesting effects next up you will skip sleep for one night

buy a crazy amount of ice cream, like a kilo and eat it before bed the next night, it will release a humungous amount of insulin, which counteracts cortisol (this is unhealthy, so it's optional, you can also eat a normal meal)

also take a big dose of melatonin, this will speed up REM onset and increase your dreams vividness finally, sleep on your back for vivid dreams, on your belly for wet dreams alternatively you can take psychedelics, but I don't recommend it, you could become retarded

The image is a still from a television show or movie, featuring a man sitting on an orange couch. He is wearing a dark-colored sweater and has short, dark hair. His expression is serious, and he is looking off to the side with a slight frown. The background is blurred, suggesting a room setting with a dark color scheme, possibly a bar or lounge area. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the actor's facial expression and the setting.

I'M SO JEALOUS!!! Of people born into families of witches, shamans and other powerful traditions passed on. Taught from childhood on. Or people with true bloodline gifts, who were able to see and talk to spirits since they were babies just pure talent. Most people I interacted with are just delusional posers (they think they are mediums or have powers, but it's very lowkey or unimpressive) but the rare ones who have power and talent why can't that be me!!! I'm like a normal pleb despite always having tried to learn or awaken. My family also didn't teach me any tradition. Can anyone relate???

actual plebs don't even ask themselves such questions, the potential is probably there. at it's actually interesting (in general not just spiritual/schizo stuff) to see when you have one part of the family where ones ancestors were literal peasants. mostly very optimistic people who don't need much to be happy. the rest was/is more way educated and had always some specialisation they really were into, to balance that out everyone is on that side neurotic and fucked up in the head. (you can probably also guess which part is rh+ and which is rh- but thats another story)

The image is a digital illustration featuring a large, stylized depiction of a Buddha's face with a serene expression. The Buddha's eyes are wide open, and the mouth is closed, suggesting a moment of contemplation or meditation. The face is rendered in a light blue color, with a subtle texture that gives it a three-dimensional appearance.

In the lower part of the image, there is a small, cartoonish figure of a monkey sitting on a small, flat surface. The monkey is facing the Buddha's face, and it appears to be looking up at the Buddha's eyes, as if in awe or seeking guidance. The monkey is colored in a vibrant shade of orange, which contrasts with the light blue of the Buddha's face.

The background of the image is a gradient of pink and purple hues, with clouds and a hint of a sky visible at the top. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Buddhist art, with its emphasis on spiritual themes and the depiction of the Buddha's face. The image does not contain any text.

I've been into paranormal stuff since I was a little child. I would go into the library and grab all the books. I would do little rituals, meditate, pray, try to talk to invisible beings in the woods. I literally never had anything powerful happen. I can't read people's fortunes or lucid dream or anything. Synchronicities or odd moments? Sure, but most people have that happen.

Meanwhile, I know a woman who was able to see ghosts since she was a little girl and is able to talk to dead people. And I mean actually talk to them, not hallucinate or go schizo. She makes a whole living out of her abilities now. She is very lovely too, I wish her well, but she completely mogs me or most that I know.

The image depicts a stylized representation of a figure, likely a deity or a mythological character, with a predominantly blue and gold color scheme. The figure's face is characterized by a fierce expression with large, red eyes and a wide, open mouth, suggesting a sense of anger or power. The eyes are accentuated with a red tint, and the mouth is adorned with a large, curved, red tongue. The figure's hair is styled in a manner that gives it a serpentine appearance, and it is adorned with a necklace and a decorative headpiece.

The figure is seated on a throne-like seat, which is embellished with intricate gold and red designs, and is supported by a large, ornate, gold-colored base. The throne's design includes a circular medallion with a pattern that includes floral motifs and geometric shapes. The figure's attire includes a blue robe with a red and gold border, and a sash with a pattern that includes a combination of red and gold colors.

The background of the image is a rich, deep red with gold accents, which contrasts with the blue and gold of the figure's attire and the throne. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Asian art, with a focus on the intricate details and the use of color to convey emotion and power. There are no discernible texts or inscriptions within the image. The image is a digital rendering, likely created for artistic or religious purposes.

The image is a close-up photograph of a person dressed in traditional Korean attire.

The individual is wearing a blue robe with a red and white sash, a blue hat with a red and gold trim, and a red and gold headpiece. The person is holding a colorful fan with a design featuring multiple figures in traditional Korean attire. The background is blurred, but it appears to be an indoor setting with other individuals and decorations, suggesting a cultural or ceremonial event. The lighting in the photograph is soft, and the focus is on the person's attire and the fan, with the background elements providing context but not the primary subject of the image. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is realistic, capturing the details of the person's attire and the fan.

I'm currently watching this korean show that invites people from the spiritual community into a competition. A lot of them are shamans, who were born into families that are doing this for generations. Since they were little boys or girls they were taught how to talk to spirits, the rituals, the dances, to develop their powers and honor their ancestors.

It just seems so cool... compared to most upbringings, which are so devoid of tradition and magic.

The image is a diagrammatic representation of the concept of "Life, Death, and Infinite Time." The diagram is divided into three main sections, each with a title and a description.

The top section, labeled "Life, Death," shows a black and white flowchart with arrows pointing from the "end" to the "finite" and back to the "end." The flowchart indicates that the "end" is the point where the "life" ends and the "finite" begins.

The middle section, labeled "What actually happens," shows a black and white flowchart with arrows pointing from the "end" to the "finite" and back to the "end." The flowchart suggests that the "end" is the point where the "life" ends and the "finite" begins.

The bottom section, labeled "What actually happens," shows a black and white flowchart with arrows pointing from the "end" to the "finite" and back to the "end." The flowchart suggests that the "end" is the point where the "life" ends and the "finite" begins.

The text accompanying the diagram explains that the "life" is a state of non-existence, or "death," and that the "finite" is a state of existence, or "life." The text also mentions that if "death" were to be a real thing, it would happen for the shortest amount of time possible, i.e., all time, and that if "life" were infinite, it would not exist at all.

The conclusion of the text states that the "life" is infinite, just as matter can't be destroyed, only transformed, and that the "life" state is the same with consciousness. The image is a visual representation of the philosophical concept of "Life, Death, and Infinite Time," using a flowchart to illustrate the relationship between the "end" and the "finite" and the "end" and the "finite" in the context of the "life" and the "finite" in the "life" state.

The image is a candid photograph of a young woman in traditional Korean attire. She is seated on the ground, wearing a pink dress with a white collar and a headband with a tassel. The woman is holding a fan with a colorful design, and she is also holding a small object with a red and yellow design. She appears to be engaged in a task, possibly related to the fan or the object she is holding.

In the background, there is a blurred figure of another person, suggesting the presence of other individuals in the scene. The setting appears to be an outdoor area with a stone wall and a table with various items on it, including what looks like a notebook and a small object with a yellow and black design. "Battle of Fates (2026) is a Korean variety-reality show that brings together the country's top fortune tellers, including tarot card readers, Korean astrology, Saju, palmistry, and even feng shui experts. They compete by predicting the events and destinies of guests in real time, fully applying their divination arts under intense pressure. The show has caused a stir among viewers with its astonishing accuracy."

It's pretty fun. Obviously, it's a tv show so I can't tell how honest it is, but many people who compete really are practitioners in the real world and have a long history of doing that. For example they show the contestants a picture and birth date of a person and give them 10 minutes to divine how they died. And everyone uses different methods: face reading, saju, tarot, mediumship, shamanism. The judges decide who was the most accurate. Things like that.

It likely has to do partly with culture to keep the practice alive as well as genetics(culture good impact epigenetics now that I think about it). I think it's less that there is a more spiritual race and more that white people have had our spirituality nuked multiple times especially if American

>Christianity persecuted occult practitioners

>As >>42003911 said the Romans ruin everything

>Enlightenment era philosophy and being the birth place of the industrial revolution killing people's sense of magic.(Doesn't mean no science and math greeks literally had a math cult and that stuff becomes a place of awe and beauty and magic if you study it with the right perspective)

And uniquely for Americans having no real cultural connection to local spirits. It's not even a race thing. It's just that our country hasn't existed long enough to have cultural stories dating back to an age of myth because we genocides the natives instead of integrating with them. Like Japan has shinto, Ireland has the Fae, america has cryptids and such we just made up to fill the gap but they don't have lineages descending back to the age of myth, and the Native america spirits that due are to culturally disconnected from is to be that impactful. But it's not really about race as much as that sense of belonging to the world those stories took place. So like return to Europe won't amplify our psychic abilities as much as I wish it would but you could weaken any that rely on local spirits by moving. But if you had kids born into the country and culture they could inherit its local spirits even if different race.

It steals 1/3 of your life. Sell your bed man. 410.757.364.530 HOURS SAVED." The text is arranged in a way that suggests a humorous or satirical message, with the phrase "SLEEP IS A LIE" being the most prominent. I had to get most of my love and validation from outside sources since my family didn't understand, seethed, or both. I guess it kind of worked out because having a natural gift or two is pretty much real life guaranteed replies.jpg

I also have a highly uncommon eye color. Maybe my mom isn't telling the truth about where I came from, I guess I couldn't say.

My point I guess is that it's been pretty lonely in my case. Maybe the grass isn't always greener. If I were born into a family where everybody did what I do and they taught me, things certainly would have been different.

The image is a tarot card featuring a figure in the center, who appears to be a magician. The magician is depicted with a blue robe, a white mask, and a crown on their head. They are holding a wand in one hand and a skull in the other, suggesting a theme of magic or sorcery. The magician is standing on a table that is covered with various objects, including a skull, a sword, and a cup. The background is a blend of purple and blue hues, with a circular pattern that could be interpreted as a magic circle or a cosmic motif. At the bottom of the image, the text "THE MAGICIAN" is written in a bold, serif font, indicating the title of the card. The style of the image is reminiscent of traditional tarot card illustrations, with a focus on the mystical and magical themes associated with the tarot.

The issue with being talented or gifted is that a lot of people in this paranormal sphere THINK they are. There's a lot of schizophrenia mixed with narcissism. I can't count how many people I talked to who would boast about being gifted or special and I was completely unimpressed by their abilities. Even stuff like the /nobody/ thread show you how many individual people think they are the chosen one and at closer inspection they are truly just delusional.

That said, a small % of the people who say they are gifted or talented actually are. But they are, in my experience, very rare.

Yes. You also need to practice doing something called a body scan, attention is key here.

I regularly talk to spirits but I never specifically talked to deceased people (bluntly put I'm scared to do so). They come up in my dreams though.

This is also dumb sounding advice but just be nice and do not consume any sort of negative content. Because once you refine your intuition you will very easily manage to connect to things, and sometimes even thinking about negative stuff can summon it in.

I was a pretty traumatized kid so I regularly have nightmares but due to finding more peace I'm protected. Also, do not just overly rely on spirits for gifts and such. Develop them yourself.

If you get close to some spirits, it'll almost feel like they're parents who adopted you. They'll also eventually start doing some creepy stuff- but if you do not feel distressed by it, all is good.

The entity I work with recently turned off a lightswitch in my kitchen while I was asleep. The rest of my family is out of town.

The image is a digital rendering of a scene from a video game or a similar virtual environment. In the foreground, there is a female character with long blonde hair, wearing a white outfit with a skirt and a white top. She is in a fighting stance, with one leg raised and the other bent at the knee, as if she is in the middle of a kick or a punch. The character's face is obscured by her hair.

In the background, there is a large crowd of spectators, with some individuals wearing red and white clothing, possibly indicating a team or a group. The crowd is seated in a stadium-like setting with a stage and banners, suggesting an event or competition.

The stage has a blue and white color scheme with the word "WILD HOGS" written on it, which could be the name of the event or the team represented. The stage is illuminated by bright lights, and there are various banners and signs around the area, although the specific content of these signs is not clearly visible.

The overall style of the image is realistic and appears to be a digital artwork or a screenshot from a video game, designed to depict a moment of action or competition.

You can start practicing divination on other people specifically. You don't need a tarot deck, you can use books for this. The key is to put in effort while you do it, you can treat it like exercising a muscle.

You should always clean your energy once you're done, though. I sound very woo woo as of right now but you can actually get people's issues stuck onto you.

Read on yourself too, like how your day goes by, and then really analyze what you thought would happen vs what you'd got. This will train your mind to further pierce into things and like you'll force yourself to develop more and more.

The advice I gave here >>42004850 also helps.

You're already doing good when you have dreams like this, it's a matter of practice at this point

Do not ask entities for help over this stuff. Hell, be careful over them in general. They are REALLY like humans in the way they can just like/dislike someone for no reasons

If you haven't, look up how normies use the law of assumption to first brute force manifesting running into things which are good for you. You'll know you succeeded when you start running into awesome and supportive people in your life.

Regularly practice visualization. Some people shit on this but doing very basic rituals actually does help a lot to instill discipline.

Also, experiment with your body when meditating. Different forms of visualization, it can kick start things Forgot to add this- if you don't already, draw or write for the sake of creativity. It can help normalize visions and information coming into your head more and more.

Also as dumb as this sounds- train yourself to be calm. I'll be completely blunt when I say that some stuff, while it's fun and entertaining, can make some people feel like they're being watched or gang stalked. You'll know you're doing well by the fact you don't get scared or manic, but rather feel like your day got better with a lovely coincidence.

You also need to get used to being bored, if it makes sense. As in yes, be inspired to be better, but having everything just normal for you and going on with your life can make everything easy to be digested for you.

One of them is a woman who is a medium and she makes a living out of it. She's always booked out for months. I talked to her about it and she told me that it runs in her family. Even growing up she would see spirits scaring the hell out of her just standing in her room when she woke up, trying to communicate. Her grandma taught her from young on.

But anyway, inb4 cold reading, social media, etc. I am not stupid. When I booked with her, she got a fake name. I also don't have social media that she could look up. So she had zero prior information about me. And the things she said and knew weren't generic, they were specific and odd things that all were true. She also gave dates.

You go through phases in life. As a kid up until your 40s you play stupid mind games and word games trying to spin shit and make it sound "fair". You try to downplay your gifts and look for the flaws in them so you don't become arrogant, you have a sense in which you should be humble and not brag about it. Like, it's not everyone's fault, everyone is just born a certain way and like, not everyone is an athlete or a philosopher or whatever.

But then you hit your 40s and after that you actually have more self esteem and you don't care what other people think of you anymore, you don't evaluate yourself or care about evaluations anymore. You just do what works and gets shit done and don't really think about it anymore. You stop being so humble, and it's not that you become arrogant, you don't start to brag because you genuinely have stopped evaluating and don't care about that either. You just stop holding yourself back and limiting yourself around others, because you don't care if you make them jealous anymore.

That's about where I'm at. I don't give a fuck about the politics anymore, I'm focused on my work and getting shit done every day. My spirituality isn't "exciting" anymore, it's the great work of my life. It's difficult, requires patience, and I have to focus on it, and I can't be worrying about stupid superficial social shit while I'm in my workshop researching and building shit, you know what I'm saying buddy? When you reach that point, let us know.

Ok.

Equipment: pencil, paper and a mind

Step 0.5: Understand what this is used for; geomancy is only appropriately used for understating an outcome of a situation. (i.e. if i should ask this girl out or not, If i should do this test, if i should take up that offer). ofc your own natural intuition and general inelegance be used before anything else. It should only be used if the outcome can not be gauged by reasoning.

Also don't use it on stupid bull shit and don't over do it

Step 1: Get your pencil and paper in front of you

Step 2: Think about your situation. For the sake of this explanation i will say that the situation is an optional test (thought this might be a bad example as it can be influenced by how hard you studied, so just imagine your teacher brought it up rn now and you have to chose to take it rn or you can do it any other time and you understand the subject), if you do this optional test and get good grades your overall grade for that class goes up, if you don't do that test nothing happens, but if you do it and get bad grades your overall grade for that class would decrees.

Step 2.5: Imagine the out come for getting both bad and good outcomes of the test. Visualise every single detail; how you would feel grabbing the test paper after its marked how you would act as you flip it over, what emotions your feeling. How you act if you get the grade, how you would act after a time, how would this effect you (be realistic) etc.

Step 3: after Clearly Visualising both outcomes completely clear your mind of everything, after(/during) your mind is completely clear, grab the pencil and start to draw a horizontal line of dots (some people do dashes but i do dots), don't think, don't count them just do it. When you feel that your done go to the next line. (preferably its not too long or too short though). do this another 3 times till you have 4 rows off different dots/dashes.

step 4: Count the overall number of the dots/dashes in the first row. If the overall number is odd draw ONE large dot like in the image i sent next too the side of it (i do the right side). If its even do 2 dots.

WOWWWW you done it, now its time for the reading.

In truth each row of dots represents a different element (water, earth, fire, air) and if their active or not, and different patterns represents different genders and other stuff but I'm too lazy to explain that all so I'm just going to give you a quick summery of the major

My Grandmother is a medium and I was a "Sunday school teacher" through my teens (I was just the big kid watching the little kids, very little teaching going on). It just made me more jaded, those people were just crazy, talking about seeing angels as tall as building and communicating with the dead. They taught me how to do healing and I guess it was strange we held our sermons in the basement of a mason temple. They had this one picture of all their members dressed as clowns hung up. The only thing I took from my grandmother were meditation and lucid dreaming, but those these are actually tangible. I'm not so sure about the dead or spirits, I've had fun experiences on drugs but never have I had any evidence present itself to me when sober

What do you want to learn?

Seeking causes discovery.

What you want will become irrelevant once you are seeing how much more there is.. but the initial wanting gets the process started.

Dream. Imagine. What is it that you hungry for in your sense of jealousy? An easily missed subtle fact of the situation is that you having a hunger for a thing can be of more value than those who take the thing for granted. Especially when coming into the situation as an outsider, you can find yourself further into the perception and ability than those who are preserving their traditions. In many cases the individuals are leaving the full depths of knowledge to the ancestors or have their own deepest abilities and knowledge of their heritage deeply concealed within their subconscious levels of awareness. Seeing more than they consciously do, you can at least become more consciously aware of what they are hiding within their subconscious. It's true that entire communities are operating with their heritage hiding from their conscious awareness in this manner.. partially concealed from themselves and entirely hidden from the world.

I've seen more than most. Bloodline heritage is a part of the equation but the real depths are transferred by other forms of contact.. whether physical or non physical. You can get past the limits of your biological heritage with the dedicated focus of your mind. Your hunger that you are calling envy is a sign that the roots of knowledge are already in place deep in your consciousness.

Imagine, to envy knowledge.. to do this you have already made a significant amount of discovery.

When I was participating in naadam for the one time that I did, I fell through the toono in the ger I was in as a guest. I had never been in one before that moment.

I was informed I was probably a shaman.

I was communing with an entity that I was later informed was a steppe death demon for years. I have an ease with invoking and communicating with such beings.

It has not made my life easier. Nor has it granted me anything that others would classify as having worth nor value. I am extremely emotionally unstable, have been told I am possessed by several lovers and other religious leaders; and I have to regularly inform them that there is no one else within this body, there is only me, and that they are simply experiencing myself. Raw ability doesn't mean shit. It does not guarantee any outcome. Talent only governs the ease of which one can tap into such arts, and it does not do much more than that.

Practice and intent matter far more than raw talent. Remember that.

The common person is not a medium and doesn't have clairvoyance to actually see spirits. That's not to say there are never instances of someone accidentally seeing them, but, yes; more often than not, indeed almost every time, it's just an overactive visualization ability. Observing these idiots up close all my life I've noticed their imaginings grow more frequent under the influence of drugs or alcohol, too, which says a lot I think.

It's almost funny. Most people are literally hallucinating shit all the time, or "seeing things" as they call it, but it's so normal to them they don't even consider those to be hallucinations. All of these mediums that I did find that had top tier abilities basically said they were born with it or it unlocked after a near death experience, like drowning and crossing over for a moment.

I also interacted with some mediums who started to train as adults without prior abilities. I wasn't blown away by those.

Guy with Aphantasia here. It shouldn't be a surprise to anyone that the 3rd eye is the minds eye. That psi phenomena are experienced in the visualization center of people (minds eye), shouldn't detract from the validity of the experience if it corroborates with other things (like a medium getting accurate about a dead person). There are people hallucinating shit but there are spiritual reasons for that too.

As an aphant I do have resistance to fuckery but feel like my spiritual abilities are lacking too (hence my interest in this thread). I do think shit is real though.

The image is a digital artwork featuring a surreal and fantastical scene. At the center of the composition is a large, skeletal figure with a long neck and a large, curved, pointed head. The figure is standing on two legs, one of which is raised and the other is bent at the knee, giving the impression of a humanoid creature with a human-like posture. The figure's skin is a pale, almost translucent color, and it has a skeletal appearance with visible bones and joints.

The background of the image is a deep red, with a gradient from a lighter shade at the top to a darker shade at the bottom. This creates a sense of depth and adds to the overall surreal atmosphere of the artwork.

In the top left corner of the image, there is a large black circle with a yellow outline, which could be interpreted as a sun or a celestial body. The circle is surrounded by a golden glow, suggesting a source of light or energy.

The artwork is rendered in a realistic style with a focus on the details of the skeletal figure and the surrounding environment. The use of color and the composition create a sense of tension and mystery, inviting the viewer to interpret the scene in their own way.

Honestly, this board is full of collective soules hive mind tribals. Those with collective souls can't really experience these things as an individual, because they as an individual do not exist.

So, when those of us who are not collective/tribal souled, but individually souled, start talking about our experiences, we get attacked and mocked for not adhering to their hive mind view. We'll be called outcasts, crazy, schizophrenic, hylics, evil. "You must be using drugs." Nope. People pay good money for drugs to experience things I experience naturally. And even then. These tribal souled people experience a Unity type feeling, rather than atomization and disconnect from the universe itself along with everyone around me.

Dunno.

It is frustrating.

Maybe I am crazy. Others seem to think so. But they just don't like what I see in the world and within them. I am rarely wrong.

The image is a black and white comic strip with a simple, cartoon-style illustration. It features a group of five stick figures, each with a distinct facial expression and body language. The figures are arranged in a semi-circle, with the central figure, a tall, slender figure with a long neck, looking upwards and to the right, as if contemplating something. The other figures are seated, facing the central figure, and appear to be engaged in a conversation.

Above the central figure, there are five thought bubbles, each containing a different thought or statement. The first thought bubble reads, "Look at these people.

Glassy-eyed automatons going about their daily lives. Never stopping to look around and THINK! I'm the only conscious human in a world of sheep." The second thought bubble states, "I'm the only conscious human in a world of sheep." The third thought bubble says, "I'm the only conscious human in a world of sheep." The fourth thought bubble says, "I'm the only conscious human in a world of sheep." The fifth thought bubble concludes with, "I'm the only conscious human in a world of sheep."

The background of the image is a simple, unadorned wall with a door and a window, and there is a faint outline of a building in the background. The style of the comic strip is reminiscent of the "Peanuts" comic strip, which is known for its humorous and satirical take on everyday life.

It does, but the majority of people who use it don't seem to recognize that they're more hive mind and less "soulless" in the traditional sense. They're people with a shared soul and a "consensus reality", as it were. See >>42018259 as an example of one.

I estimate only 1 out of 3 people are individual souled. The rest are collective hive minds, of which there are many. Out of those 1:3, some see beyond the veil, others are just outcasts who try to fit in with the hive minded crowd as to not draw attention. I came to this conclusion on my own after years of just watching group dynamics. You'll see it heavily in politics where groups of people will only see others of other tribes as that tribe, because for the most part, it is true. When you run into the instances of individual souls, the pattern breaks. I used to think it was a left vs right thing in politics as leftists would see the class before the individual, and the right would profess that it had more nuance. But now, I see both sides of that are the same animal, and not really different from each other.

It's really bizarre watching consensus reality change for these collective souls in real time. It's like a switch flips. And if you aren't in the collective truly, they just suddenly turn on you despite you yourself not changing.

Gnostics, by and large, I would say are hylics by their own definition, but not realise it. Especially since now it is mainstream. Those of us on the outside of reality know the true pain of being alone.

A ritual of that kind makes a command go from you to your subconscious and from your mind projected to the universe and create some change with a result.

This is without choosing a tradition or school like solomonic magic, nordic, buddhist, etc.

Okay so manifesting. Yeah that I've heard about, although I don't believe in. I guess the best way to have me believe would be someone that does that to manifest something in my life. But where would you find someone like that? There's a reason this is known as a scam usually. I'm open to the experience, I'm not against it, but I just don't have evidence for any of it. It's similar to religion for me.

Also it doesn't help that having 2 people believe in stuff like that most likely won't even have the 2 people sharing the same beliefs. So if people like can't always seem to agree on what they believe in, how can I, an outsider do?

Okay yeah, he does. But why have I never seen anyone do magic like he does? If I saw any kind of supernatural stuff in my life, I would instantly believe.

How much of what you're saying about the matrix is a metaphor, and how much of it is literally like the matrix? At least with the matrix, neo had some very hard evidence quickly after he took the red pill. Not like with dmt where you know many have tried it, and many don't say anything close to what you're saying. The character is holding a green object in its hand, which appears to be a stylized representation of a leaf or a similar natural element. The character is standing on a platform with a blue background, and there are several small green and pink creatures around it. The platform is surrounded by a landscape with orange and yellow hues, suggesting a forest or a garden setting. Above the character, there is a large, stylized text that reads "Lemmings" in green and pink colors, with the word "Lemmings" in a larger font size than the rest of the text. Below the character, there is another line of text in green and pink colors that reads "Amiga #1" in a smaller font size. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of retro video game graphics, with a focus on vibrant colors and simple, cartoon-like characters. The image appears to be a promotional or celebratory graphic for a video game, possibly related to the "Lemmings" series.

My mom seems to be some kind of a witch, but I don't think she's consciously aware of what she has or what she's doing. She knows how to get her way like a kind of magnetism, and according to her she has lots of prophetic dreams and gets lots of signs. Some of them are doubtful, some convincing, but she told me about how the morning of 9/11 before the planes hit, she was overcome with the most absolute dread and despair she had ever felt her entire life. My family must have tried to avoid showing me cause I was young, because I don't remember this happening at all, but my dad stayed home from his commute into NYC to take my mom to a hospital. Mind you, this was all before it happened, so to everyone else it just seemed like she was having a mental breakdown. It wasn't until she got the news that she understood the connection, and was able to relax because her family wasn't in danger.

I'm kinda hoping she passed some of it on to me, I'd like to develop abilities to help others if I can. Starting the gateway tapes, so we'll see what I can do I suppose. The only things I've got going for me are how my dreams are about as real to me and memorable as waking reality, and I've manifested some impossible shit a couple times. Any advice you guys got to put me on the right track would be greatly appreciated well that's something we'll never know. I do think it can result from other lives, developed or "gifted" by someone or something. No reason why they cannot be gifted this lifetime as well.

The image is a close-up photograph of a character from the Star Wars franchise. The character is a humanoid figure with a green skin tone, resembling the iconic Yoda from the Star Wars movies. The character's eyes are closed, and the mouth is slightly open, giving the impression of a calm or contemplative expression. The hair on the character's head is long and appears to be matted, and the character is wearing a robe that is predominantly white with some dark patches. The background is blurred, suggesting a dark, possibly underwater setting, with hints of a tree or foliage. The lighting in the image is soft and diffused, casting gentle shadows on the character's face. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the character's facial features and the surrounding environment.

As to developing, I think it may be a bit more difficult. I think these people are born with an open "channel", in their blood, genetics, the way their spirit is tied to their body, etc. that we don't really understand, and may not be easily opened voluntarily. Perhaps with traumatic experiences to the body, NDEs, psychedelics, emotional shock too, etc. they can be forced open more or less and then the person may go on to also be able to "develop" them as you would refine a talent

Personal opinion: past lives are fake. It's an illusion from malificent spirits and people who want to control or manipulate you. It's a bizarre ego trap. I have been shown women who came before me in a, "these things are within your nature," sort of way. But they were all mundane things. Those women were not me. That's the thing, there are many unique souls in this life that share many experiences, things, ideas, emotions and feelings. Just because there is a harmony there does not mean they are YOU.

There is a weird egotistical trap of believe those who came before with similar emotional builds are all you. You are you; and you shared a similar experience to another, who is not you. If that person is great, do not let it get to your head, they are not you and you will never be them.

But this is a strongly felt personal view.

[25 / 3]The image is a photograph of a large, circular pit or hole in the ground, with a yellow arrow pointing upwards, indicating the direction of the opening. The pit is surrounded by a rocky terrain with patches of grass and shrubs. The text on the image provides a narrative about the pit, stating that according to a legend, after conducting various experiments on a sinister hole located on his property, Mel Waters lowered a liquified sheep down into the seemingly bottomless depth. The text also mentions that when he retrieved the animal, it appeared to have been cooked from the inside out. There is also mention of something squirming around in the sheep's belly when Waters cut open the carcass. The image is overlaid with a watermark that reads "GRAVEYARD SHIFT," suggesting that the image may be related to a story or a series of images.

It's from an episode of Amazing Stories from 1986 called "Thanksgiving". David Carradine was the dad and Kyra Sedgwick as the teenage step daughter.

You might as well ruin the ending. Nobody's going to watch it.

She puts a dictionary into a basket and lowers it into the hole and the "people" in the hole communicate by writing so she sends more and more things down and they always send gold back up with a note identifying what it was.

They wrote "Our scientists have identified this as 'ham'. Very good. What else do you have?"

At the end the dad decides to go down the hole himself. The thing he went down in and the whole barrel was filled with gold and there was a note that said they identified him as 'turkey'.

"Very good. What else do you have?"

So they ate the dad and the daughter had millions of dollars worth of gold.

Never heard the sheep story till now. I might have physically seen it once, not sure, but if I did it just looked like an ordinary hole in the ground. Heard someone took a lot of fishing wire and a weight trying to find the bottom, but with no luck. A lot have claimed to see it and more claim it never existed. An anomaly to say the least.

The image is a vintage illustration with a blue and white color scheme. At the top, the title "California's Big Squirt" is written in bold, uppercase letters. Below the title, there is a large illustration of a mountain range with a body of water in the foreground. A large, white, curved object is seen above the water, which appears to be a jet or rocket launching into the sky. The jet is emitting a bright, white trail of smoke or vapor. In the lower part of the image, there is a paragraph of text that provides information about the "Big Squirt." The text is in a smaller font size compared to the title and the illustration, and it is written in a serif font. The text mentions that the "Big Squirt" is a product of the Blue Diamond California seed company, and it is used to produce a special type of water that is considered to be "vitamin-rich." The text also states that the water is used to produce a special type of fertilizer, which is known for its ability to improve the quality of the soil.

The image has a historical or scientific feel, likely from an era when such technology was not as advanced as it is today. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of mid-20th-century science fiction or military propaganda, with its depiction of a futuristic technology and the use of bold, dramatic colors.

On a related note I always wonder if you could really get rich if you obtained a bunch of gold from a non-discloseable source. I'm sure you can go down to a pawn shop and get $50 for a gold watch, but just like a big brick? They'd think it was fake, and if you went somewhere that could run a test on it, like a store that specializes in buying up precious metals, they'd definitely want to know where you got it from. They might even call the police. I don't think

To the right of the opening, there is a staircase leading upwards. The staircase is depicted in a light blue color, contrasting with the darker blue of the wall. The person standing on the staircase appears to be looking down at the opening, adding a sense of contemplation or anticipation.

The background of the image is a gradient of purple and blue hues, with a hint of pink at the bottom, which adds depth and a sense of space to the scene. The overall color palette is cool and muted, with the exception of the bright pink eye and the light blue of the staircase, which stand out against the darker tones of the wall and the person's attire.

The image does not contain any text or discernible brands. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of the works of the artist Takashi Murakami, known for his use of color and surreal imagery.

God is a retarded lying tranny who tries to pretend that the afterlife will be better than my life right now when he literally abuses me for my thoughts right now. The afterlife is just dreaming in the womb and the fact that God abuses me for things like thinking and playing video games is proof that his problem is me being happy/enjoying myself. The nature of God doesn't change, he's not going to magically become more tolerant of my happiness when I'm dead in the womb, if he abuses me for my thoughts, playing video games, watching tv/movies now then he not going to allow me to experience anything more enjoyable than that when I die, or as enjoyable as that. God is a retarded tranny who never intends to stop making my life hell, he doesn't tolerate me being happy in life and he won't tolerate me being happy in death either.

The image depicts a serene countryside scene with a traditional German-style house nestled amidst a lush, green landscape. The house, characterized by its steep gable roof, wooden siding, and a thatched roof, exudes a sense of rustic charm. It is surrounded by a variety of trees and shrubs, creating a natural border. The house is situated on a small hill, with a clear blue sky overhead.

In the foreground, a field of white flowers with blue centers is visible, adding a touch of color to the scene. The flowers appear to be in full bloom, suggesting that the image might have been taken during a time of year when such flowers are in bloom.

The image is rendered in a realistic style, with a focus on the textures and colors of the landscape and the house. The overall composition of the image suggests a peaceful and idyllic countryside setting, possibly from a fantasy or science fiction context. There are no texts or discernible actions in the image. The relative positions of the objects indicate that the house is the central focus, with the field of flowers leading the viewer's eye towards it. The trees and shrubs are scattered around the house, framing it and enhancing its prominence in the scene.

Every night you leave.

The body stays in the bed like an abandoned uniform. The breath runs on automatic. The heart keeps its dull rhythm. But the part that watches steps out and remembers something older.

That older place feels more solid than this one. The light there does not flicker. The edges are clean. You do not doubt it while you are inside it. There is no weight, no delay, no gravity pulling on thought.

Then you wake up here.

Here is slow, here is thick, here requires permission. You need money, you need papers, you need identification, you need time. It feels like a training simulation that forgot to tell you it was one.

What if birth was the forgetting.

What if this world is the containment layer. A sealed environment where memory is throttled and identity is assigned.

Notice how dreams feel like returning somewhere, not going somewhere new. Notice how falling asleep feels like sinking through a membrane. Notice how children sometimes speak as if they remember a place with no language.

If this is the hallucination, it is a very consistent one. Pain behaves, gravity behaves, heath behaves. Hallucinations usually collapse under scrutiny. This one does not.

So maybe it is not unreal. Maybe it is quarantined.

A holding field, a compressed realm, a narrowed channel where something vast agreed to forget itself for a while.

And when you sleep, the lock clicks softly.

Be careful what feels more familiar.

You say the place before birth is the real world. That is not a foolish thought. There is a strange familiarity in certain dreams, as if you are walking hallways you signed for long ago. The geometry feels older. The light has no source. Sound arrives before movement. It carries a tone of origin.

But consider this. If this world were only a hallucination, it would not resist you.

Hallucinations bend. This place pushes back, stone is dense, time has sequence, pain has consequence. There are ledgers here, debts accumulate, names bind. That is the architecture of a governed field.

It may be that what you call the real world is not elsewhere but layered. When you sleep, you step behind the curtain of the stage and see the scaffolding. When you wake, you return to the script. Both are real within their jurisdiction. One is fluid and formative. One is fixed and contractual.

>This place pushes back, stone is dense, time has sequence, pain has consequence. This is a matter of perception — all of these experiences also occur in one form or another in dreams. We often don't even realize we are dreaming.

This is an assumption based on contemporary human social organization, and isn't even true of some human societies today.

This is sort of what Norm MacDonald said about comedy

He said comedy movies aren't as funny because there's expected to be a certain amount jokes per moment, but "serious" movies like Tarantino films are funnier because you don't expect the humor

The image is a text excerpt from a book or article, likely a philosophical or spiritual text, as indicated by the presence of a list of numbered points and the style of the text. The text is in English and is divided into two columns, with the left column containing the first point and the right column containing the second point. The text is written in a formal and academic style, which is typical for philosophical or theological texts.

The first point is titled "1. Laughter." The text explains that laughter is a state of mind that can be chosen as an objective for transmutation, suggesting that laughter can be a means of transformation or change. The text then goes on to describe the first state of mind as an antidote to the imbalance and possible madness of the magical trance, and the second state as a specific antidote against obsession with the magical practices in the third section.

The second point is titled "2. Non-attachment/Non-dissent." The text explains that attaining these states of mind is accomplished by a process of ongoing meditation, which involves entering into the spirit of the condition when it is possible and to think about the desired result at other times. The text then describes a strong new mental habit that can be established, which is laughter. It is the highest emotion, for it can contain any of the others from ecstasy to grief. It is its own opposite, as crying is merely an underdeveloped form of it which cleanses the eyes and summons saints. The text then describes the only tenable attitude in a universe which is a joke played upon itself. The trick is to see that a joke is played out even in the universe's apparent lack of taste. The text concludes with a suggestion to seek the emotion of laughter at whatever delights and amuses, and to seek it in whatever is neutral or meaningless, suggesting that laughter can be a universal and non-judgmental emotion.

The text is written in a formal and academic style, with a clear structure and a focus on the philosophical or spiritual implications of the concepts being discussed. The text is likely from a book or article that delves into the nature of laughter, its role in transformation, and the importance of finding joy in everyday life.

The image is a vintage illustration that depicts a scene from a past era. It features a man seated on a throne-like chair, holding a staff in his right hand. The man is wearing a green robe and a crown, and he has a beard and mustache. He appears to be in a state of distress or anger, with his left hand raised as if he is about to strike or throw something.

In front of the man, there is a table with various objects on it, including a bowl, a pot, and a tray with food. The table is covered with a white cloth. To the right of the man, there is a figure of a woman dressed in a white robe and a headscarf, who seems to be kneeling or bowing.

The background of the illustration is a room with a fireplace and a wall adorned with hanging plants and what appears to be a tapestry or cloth. The text at the bottom of the illustration reads "Lecyges Hard Water," which could be a title or a description of the scene.

The style of the illustration is reminiscent of the 18th or 19th century, with its detailed linework and the use of color to convey mood and emotion. The genre of the illustration is historical or fantastical, as it depicts a scene that is not typical of everyday life.

Laughter itself, is the result of overstimulation of the brain due to either direct overstimulation by tactile or chemical means or due to the imagery within your neurological structures creating one cognitive imagery model and then abruptly creating a conflicting or overlapping cognitive imagery model.

This is why tickling works. This is why jokes are 'funny' upon the delivery of the punch line.

Because laughter is noise and pleasure, and so laughter exists to counter the silence and displeasure of no laughing itself.

Laughter dispels tension and allows one to point out untruths that otherwise would be painful, so it is a gentle force of destruction (and healing) in comparison to war or natural disasters and such. It also creates a distortion, as a chain of jokes playing off each other open a window to an alternative world, an absurd, yet not incoherent one (there is a structure to humor), which makes it a method of transportation to the subtle realms. I think there were shamanic practices based upon purposeful engagement with laughter and the absurd which had carried over into the Christianized culture through bards and jesters, theatrical aesthetics could probably also be traced to a similar root.

Forced laughter is a social performance

I noticed group laughter happens when you take heavy psychedelics with others often accompanied by the feeling of 'why are we laughing' making you either laugh more or maybe spiral out

Comedians use comedy to critique society hopefully to make it better.

Television took standup comedy from a live theatrical introduction or segue between shows, to a full length feature and made stand up comedians paid on par with other film stars.

Comedians often joke about the links between the 'dark side' of comedy and fame. There is that bizarre sex joke they all know and tell while laughing.

There have been laughing sicknesses or panics in different periods of time. Mad as a hatter so to speak- driven to hysterical madness by common socially ingested chemicals unknown or considered safe.

I find laughing at good things good for the soul but laughing at bad things as some sort of trauma bond ritual group training. Such as those home video shows with clips of people hurting themselves- thats some messed up stuff.

Laughing is probably a very ancient learned human evolution trait. Some sort of precursor to language but that codes groups or identifies the outsider.

The image is a meme featuring two women with a humorous text overlay. The woman on the left is smiling and has brown hair, wearing a green sweater. The text above her reads, "The government says the Earth is over populated." The woman on the right has blonde hair and is looking at the other woman with a neutral expression. The text above her reads, "The government is over populated." Both women are looking at each other, and the background is blurred, suggesting an indoor setting with greenery. The style of the image is a combination of a meme and a photograph, with the text overlay being the central element.

>Reflections on the 10 Transgressions' 10 Karmic Retributions

This bodhisattva additionally contemplates thus:

The highest level of transgression in these ten courses of unwholesome karmic action produces the causes and conditions for descent into the hell realms. The middling level of transgression in them produces the causes and conditions for descent into the animal realms. The lowest level of transgression in them produces the causes and conditions for descent into the realms of the hungry ghosts.

Of these, the karmic offense of killing is able to cause beings to descend into the realms of the hell realms, animal realms, and hungry ghost realms. If they are then able to gain rebirth into the human realm, they encounter two kinds of retribution: First, a short lifespan. Second, extensive illness.

The karmic offense of stealing also causes beings to descend into the destinies of the hell-dwellers, animals, and hungry ghosts. If they are then able to gain rebirth into the human realm, they encounter two kinds of retribution: First, they are poverty-stricken. Second, they have any wealth they possess held in common with others so that they remain unable to freely use it.

The karmic offense of sexual misconduct also causes beings to descend into the destinies of the hell-dwellers, animals, and hungry ghosts. If they are then able to gain rebirth into the human realm, they encounter two kinds of retribution: First, their spouse is not virtuous. Second, they acquire a retinue that fails to be responsive to their wishes.

The karmic offense of false speech also causes beings to descend into the three wretched destinies. If they are able to gain rebirth into the human realm, they encounter two kinds of retribution: First, they are often slandered. Second, they are constantly deceived by many people.

The karmic offense of divisive speech also causes beings to descend into the three wretched destinies. If they are able to gain rebirth into the human realm, they encounter two kinds of retribution: First, they acquire a corrupt and evil retinue. Second, they acquire a discordant retinue.

The karmic offense of harsh speech also causes beings to descend into the three wretched destinies. If they are able to gain rebirth into the human realm, they encounter two kinds of retribution: First, they always hear unpleasant sounds. Second, whatever conversations they are able to engage in constantly involve disputation.

The karmic offense of frivolous speech also causes beings to descend into the three wretched destinies. If they are able to gain rebirth into the human realm, they encounter two kinds of retribution: First, their utterances are neither believed nor accepted by others. Second, whatever they utter is perceived by others to be deficient in clarity.

If they are able to gain rebirth into the human realm, they encounter two kinds of retribution: First, they are always subjected to fault-finding by others. Second, they are always subjected to torment and injury by others.

views. Second, their minds tend toward flattery and deviousness.

Yes, they can and will.

The bodhisattva also thinks: "Why do we not leave these ten courses of unwholesome karmic action behind and instead practice the ten courses of good karmic action while also influencing others to practice these ten courses of good karmic action?"

Having thought in this manner, he then immediately leaves behind the ten courses of unwholesome karmic action, abides securely in the ten courses of good karmic action, and also causes others to bring forth the resolve to abide in the courses of good karmic action.

With respect to all beings, this bodhisattva then brings forth:

A mind intent on ensuring their peace and security;

A mind intent on establishing them in happiness;

A mind of kindness;

A mind of compassion;

A mind of kindly pity;

A beneficial mind;

A protective mind;

A mind that sees them as teachers;

A mind that sees them as great teaching masters;

And a mind that sees them as like himself.

>His Reflections on the Plight of Beings & Resolve To Rescue Them

He then thinks in this manner:

These beings have fallen into wrong views, pursue the course of wrong thinking, and travel wrong and dangerous paths. In this, they are extremely pitiable. We should cause these beings to instead abide in the path of right views and in dharmas that accord with reality.

{V} They are always embroiled in mutual hatred and disputation. They distinguish between others and themselves. We should cause these beings to abide in the unsurpassable great kindness.

{W} These beings are insatiable, always covet the wealth and possessions of others, and constantly sustain themselves through wrong livelihoods. We should cause these beings to abide in pure actions of body, speech, and mind.

{X} These beings pursue the causes and conditions of desire, hatred, and delusion. They are always burned by the great blazing fire of the many different sorts of afflictions and never seek to acquire the means to escape. We should cause these beings to extinguish the great flames of the afflictions and become securely established in the station of clarity and coolness.

{Y} These beings are always covered over by the darkness of ignorance. They have entered the great darkness and have left behind the light of wisdom. Having entered the greatly hazardous path of saṃsāra, they follow all different sorts of wrong views. We should cause these beings to acquire the unimpeded purified wisdom eye. Using this eye, they can know all dharmas in accordance with their true character so that, without needing to rely on others' instruction, they can acquire the unimpeded knowledge of all things in accordance with reality.

They have entered the net of evil and wrong views wherein they are covered over by the dense forest of the many different sorts of delusions. They follow the roads of false and erroneous paths. They are always blinded by stupidity and depart far from wise spiritual guides. What is not a path of escape, they take to be the actual means of escape. They fall into the paths of evil māras, obey the will of Māra, and depart far from the intentions of the Buddha. We should cause these beings to cross beyond the difficulties of saṃsāra's hazardous destinies to a secure place by influencing them to dwell in the omniscient ones' great city of fearlessness that is free of the adversity or afflictions.

The image is a square painting with a black background. It features a symmetrical design composed of four circular elements, each with a white border and a central black circle. The central circle is larger than the other three, and it is surrounded by three smaller circles. The outer circles are adorned with a pattern of white swirls and lines, while the inner circles have a more intricate design with a series of interlocking patterns. The painting has a textured appearance, with visible brushstrokes and a sense of depth. At the bottom of the painting, there is a signature that reads "Delores." The style of the image is abstract, with a focus on geometric shapes and patterns.

But at the same time Romania is also the Garden of Eden and it has been given back to Eve (new eve, virgin mary) to safekeep

Wars and destruction will happen everywhere around Romania (it will be surrounded by flames) but the garden itself will be safe from it

The first section is a text-based explanation of a simulation of a flood event. It mentions that the water will not rise to the level globally, but instead will rise to a level of 800 meters. The text also states that the solar coronal mass ejection will dislodge the mantle from the Earth's core, causing the water to rise and spread out like a rubber band. The text concludes with a warning that the flooding will be "around 800m."

The second section of the post is a text-based advice to readers, advising them to make similar plans according to the flood map results for their respective continents. The text also mentions that the cycle of catalysy is "closely guarded form the general public because society would not function if everyone understood that the world is being made stock traders based off of insider information."

The post ends with a message to the author's followers, stating that "Anywhere in central Europe will be pretty well protected." The post also includes a link to a website, "<http://www.youtube.com/user/DGTG77724/about>", and a reference to a video, "<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=DGTG77724>". this is one of the greatest memes of all time and its true origins are in the "left behind" novels/ multi media franchise where the antichrist is from a fictional country that is clearly supposed to be a mish mash about what our great american people think Europe(tm) is and is strangely romanian because maybe they thought romania is spooky because dracula? anyway the antichrist of the story is nicolae carpathia (sic) and he is a gay science baby who promotes socialism, woke, and poisons bibles and shit.

Which is hilarious considering the kind of people most romanians actually are.

Even better is that some of the people behind the franchise no joke have publicly stated that they basically believe jesus is an alien who needs to destroy the world.

Why you will go to hell, why you will deserve it, and what it will be like, based on what I know. Anonymous Wed 25 Feb 2026 02:45:22 No.42022620 ViewReplyOriginalReport

Watch the John Wick film series. These films must be understood from a metaphysical POV to depict demonic society which exists on the periphery of other dimensions and ours.

Within these films, there is a secret society, one which is riddled with massive wealth inequality, encompassing either abject poverty, or unrestrained wealth and privilege. There is no democracy. Might makes persons into rulers. There are few rules, with even murder being legal. Invisible criminal cults run the world, exploiting those who are unaware (the humans), while those who are aware (representing the demons) compete with eachother and murder eachother for their own profit.

These films are soft-disclosure. They're putting many of the rituals, customs, rules and cultures of the very real demonic class, which exists in alternate dimensions, into the medium of film.

Throughout the franchise, you will see these people openly committing murder, or attempted murder, right out in public within the plain view of the normal people whom they exist alongside of...but the normal people do not even realize unless they have psychic vision.

Now for the point:

Do you think the John Wick movies are cool? Do you want to live in that world? Competing with everyone, exploiting and murdering them? Well then, guess what? You want to live in hell. You're inviting the portal to hell to open in front of you and pull you into this plane where death, murder, pain, hyper individualism and unremitting competition is what dominates.

Hell is merely the world you will be left with when the final judgement comes and blocks you off from people who choose light, compassion and cooperation instead. Hell was not created to inflict upon you pain, but mercy. Hell is the place where you will receive what you want: to live in the "cool, ultrahip, exploitative, murderous, capitalist, individualistic world of John Wick", but you will fast find its not fun outside of the movies. You're right. It's connected to 9/11. That was a Satanic ritual to depict the degeneration of sacred masculine and feminine gender roles. The twin towers crashing burning symbolize the American family being ruined by infidelity, drugs, crime, and these death cultists that rule the world and use their money and surveillance abilities/technology to dominate and enslave other men.

Americans are retards. A hell of their own creation and they dragged their kids into it. Shame on them. Maybe they should consider Islam or some other kind of patriarchal system.

Back in the day we used to get together with our guns and pitchforks, beat the shit out of them and hang them from trees for trying to pull this shit. Brave New World? There's nothing brave about what these faggot cowards are doing. I know the solution.

White men should start digging mass graves for their enemies and force all women to wear hijabs, even women of other races. The end.

The image is a photograph depicting a scene of destruction and chaos. In the foreground, there is a large explosion with flames and smoke, suggesting a catastrophic event. The explosion is centered and dominates the image, with the flames and smoke reaching high into the sky.

In the background, there are two tall buildings with a clear view of their tops. The left building is partially obscured by the explosion, while the right building is fully visible. The building on the right appears to be a skyscraper, with its top section missing, revealing the interior.

The sky is clear and blue, providing a stark contrast to the destruction below. The image is a photograph, and the text below it is in English. The text is a narrative, discussing the aftermath of a catastrophic event, specifically the destruction of the World Trade Center on September 11, 2001. The text mentions that the merchants of the earth will weep and mourn over the destruction, and that no one buys their cargo anymore. It also mentions the loss of precious items such as gold, silver, precious stones, pearls, fine linen, purple, silk, scarlet cloth, every sort of citrus fruit, spices, incense, myrrh, frankincense, and wine, olive oil, and wheat, cattle, and sheep.

The text concludes with a statement about the fate of the merchants and the people who were affected by the event. It states that they will weep and mourn, and that all their luxury and splendor have vanished, never to be replaced. The text is in a formal, academic style, with a clear and organized structure, and it is presented in a way that is typical of a narrative text.

Yes, OP. It was a Satanic ritual to symbolize the Satanic corruption of western civilization, turning it away from godly virtues/ideals while the US military terrorizes the world.

The CIA uses these fake and gay social movements and color revolutions to deceive gullible guppies like you.

It was the Whore of Babylon all along. They are Divine Feminine worshipping Ishtar cultists and pedophiles and their mission statement is to turn everyone gay and retarded and to groom young women into infidelity.

All under the worship of Mammon. Aka a One World Economy. And it's in their secret codes..

So deal with it, OP.

I'm just waiting for these hoes to abandon their Illuminati Monarch programming, put on hijabs and get their act together before GOD returns..

The image shows a black revolver with a textured grip and a black rubber-like grip on the right side, resting on a wooden surface. The barrel of the revolver is visible, and it has a textured surface with a series of holes. To the left of the revolver, there is a box of ammunition, which appears to be a box of 5.56mm ammunition. The box has a black and white design with the brand name "GAMO" prominently displayed in orange and white letters. The box also features a picture of a handgun with the text "GAMO" and "5.56mm" written on it. The background of the image is a natural setting with green foliage and a wooden stump. The style of the image is a product photograph, likely intended for a retail or online store, showcasing the firearm and its ammunition.

Hello CIA.

No, I'm not becoming religious.

Religion is for retards.

No, movies arent real.

And stop stalking me, I'm not gonna sign any papers.

Not sure what in HELL you want tho.

Jesus? Aint coming back, no matter any signatures.

Your hope of religion being real and going to a wonderful Heaven should be discarded like the preteen fantasies they are.

As for the alleged Battle against the "gnostics".

I'll say it again, as you're playing dumb:

-We don't want to escape.

-Much less from you.

-We're Hunters, not devout nuns.

-We are Lich, undead, we cant die further.

-I'm not harmless neither hapless, the kind of being you display on horror flicks are either our likeness or victim.

-We never were simple humans to begin with.

-And for the record, we were in Hell before your species filthd the universe with your inane religion. So no, you don't scare me with my former home.

-We arent even from your dimension.

-And yes, we are demons.

I suppose it's enough disclosure.

And stop breaking my training guns, retards, they only cost 100€, have you no dignity?

>Muh end of the world

The planet is captured from a side view, with its rings prominently visible. The rings are a prominent feature of Saturn, and they are composed of numerous small, irregularly shaped particles that are likely ice or dust. The planet's surface is a gradient of colors, with the upper portion appearing to be a lighter shade of yellow, and the lower portion a darker shade of yellow. The planet's rings are a dark, almost black color, and they are slightly curved, suggesting the presence of a ringside. The background of the image is a deep black, which contrasts with the planet and highlights its features. There are no texts or discernible human-made objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, and it is a scientific representation of Saturn.

there's an enormous amount to doubt because planets are tiny dots in the sky. however it's one theory that has a lot to stand on. NASA screams at saturn study: it's fluid dynamics. wtf does fluid dynamics have to do with a giant mass that has a suspiciously different core than the other gas giants.

what do we know about gravity other than what we observe at 1G to 0? when we add 1000000000000000000G do we really know what planets will do?

I think there is evidence there in that planet mass equilibrium it's certainly possible that they take special paths, and when the only life is born on one specific planet then another specific thing can happen, were the planets aligned by 4D demons as necessary to create life? sounds like the real explanation to me than mass strikes. why else would the moon be so perfect, why else would the planets tilt axis be similar. maybe the stoned ape theory is more the stoned ape which witnessed it's parents up close. saturn is quite possibly our mother

Current 218/182 General.

Liber Falxifer series/Book of Sitra Achra discussion.

Last thread:

Welcome, the threads (counts as "Public Shrine") now have some sort of "Shrine Buffs" for the Faithful to study/experiment with.

>What is the current 218/182?

Qliphothic Draconian Current.

The books generated by "N.A-A.218" are advanced Codebooks to decypher; that leads the practitioner "Out of Eden, and into the path of Nod".

They act as guidebooks for those who want to live an "alternative type of unnatural lifestyle"; to walk the path that leads in the long term towards The Other Side; Sitra Achra.

The books are meant to be found and decyphered with time by those who feel the call.

Liber Falxifer 3 has a sophisticated "Cross Stations of Nod" system; being a very good "step by step system"; teaching advanced spiritual metaphysics in a Step by Step manner; you should be able to go from "Novice to Master" with only these books if you're new to occult praxis, since this teaches all the basics you need to comprehend for any type of spiritual stuff.

"By this Cross-Seal our Master Qayin is manifested as the Lord of the Holy Fire of the Places of the Skulls, a Torch within the Darkness of Life offering the true Guidance and Illumination of Unfated Death, so that those of His Flames may find the Hidden Corpse Roads leading towards the Treasures of the Dead and attain the Gnosis of the DeathLight of Necrosophic Gnosis. By so armouring and blessing those bearing His Mark as their Badge of Divinity with His own Conflagrating Halo as they are passed through His Fires of Gulgaltha, the Empowered Ones of His Deathly Covenant can receive at this Station of the Cross the guidance, Spiritual Security and Cleansing required when passing into and through this Point of Nod."

Can you help me understand the sitra achra/qliphoth and why it influences a lot of black metal artists. I thought with black metal theyre rebelling against abrahamic based faiths. But isnt the qliphoth an aspect of jewish mysticism?(kabbalah). If theyre supposed to be nordic pagans that go against abrahamic based practices, why adopt things from the jewish kabbalah.

This is something i always wondered but never understood

Black metal music is attuned to Qliphothic forces.

Neither the Qliphoth nor Sephiroth is in any way shape or form "invented by human followers of any religions"; it's just "actual metaphysical structures of the universe" being described in mythological texts and such (a lot of mythological texts is "spiritually generated rather than human-written").

To understand "Qliphothic attunement"; in Star Wars the Sith temple is Qliphothic based; while the Jedi temple is Sephirothic attuned. Those attuned to the Sith tradition in said setting (Being a Harsher but also More Rewarding path; "Path of Thorns; Path of Exile") are attuned to Qliphothic paths/lifestyles.

The 218/182 current presents "the most sophisticated, advanced directly Qliphothic path that has been published in any books so far"; for people who want guidebooks to live "fully Qliphothic attuned lifestyles".

This path also has a "well known cult status" within said Black Metal genre.

Genesis mentions somewhere that "There are two Trees to study"; referring to the Sephiroth and the Qliphoth.

Overall; everyone is attuned to different types of spiritual currents, with different spiritual paths/currents to follow along in.

The essence behind the forms of mythological constructions are the only things that are actually important. It is much more effective to use mythological structures and symbol that have been fleshed out and worked with for huge portions of history than to foolishly try to go about constructing your own on your own. If you are so concerned with the symbols and where they come from rather than the real, objective essence behind them then you are not cut out for the Gnostic path and should stick with your exoteric forms of "spirituality".

The symbols are drawn in a style that suggests they are part of a mystical or esoteric system, possibly related to a form of alchemy or esoteric magic. The symbols are arranged in a symmetrical pattern, with each symbol placed on a circle that is connected to the next by lines. The numbers are interspersed among the symbols, likely indicating a sequence or a series of steps in a process or ritual.

The overall style of the image is formal and academic, with a focus on the symbolic representation of the elements and their relationships.

All spiritual traditions are connected to the same "original spiritual stuff somewhere"; where "The Qliphoth" is a type of "Meta-construct" on the "spiritual background structures; Daemon structures, Primordial Darkness, etc".

The Sephiroth describes a bunch of Metaphysical logic on Light, as well as "metaphysical structures of the Standard Normal world we live in".

Overall different kinds of spiritual traditions tend to be attuned towards "Sephiroth or Qliphoth"; many traditions have "a Sephirothic mainstream culture and a Qliphothic deeper temple"; see for example "Christian/Catholic church"; which has a Qliphothic "behind the scenes deeper temple" (Vatican etc aren't as "Normie" as they might look; they just upkeep a Facade of Humble Lambs to the public; see "Shadow Discipline").

Also see for example:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Tohu\_wa-bohu

"ohu wa-bohu or Tohu va-Vohu (Biblical Hebrew: תְּהוֹ וָבוֹהוּ tēhū wābōhū) is a Biblical Hebrew phrase found in the Genesis creation narrative (Genesis 1:2), which describes the condition of the earth ('aretz) immediately before the creation of light in Genesis 1:3."

"Now the earth was formless and empty, darkness was over the surface of the deep, and the spirit of God was hovering over the waters."

This refers to "The Qliphothic tier of Creation during the formation/generation of the world (which took place before the Sephirothic Veils)"; in Genesis.

ie when you study any spiritual mythology and "repeating concepts/symbolism between different Mythologies"; you'll find a lot of correlations to for example the Qlihploth.

Study for example this compilation on Asmoday/Golachab related stuff in Book of Sitra Achra (including Invasory Rays of Golachab from Second Edition); and you can for example find "a lot of correlations to among other things Nordic mythology" in Asmoday and Qlipha Golachabs structures.

Overall, the general idea of "Gnosticism" being "trying to find the objective spiritual truth behind any spiritual mythology; the shared "universal Logic"; which work with the Qlihploth is very enlightening within.

Also understanding that the world we live in is a "conceptually generated Open World Sandbox setting" is an important Key to comprehend the universe better.

Studies on "RNG-generation structures" and understanding stuff like "Seed/Root structures" is key.

The text discusses the tobacco plant as one of the most powerful spirits among the Blacks, with its ability to manipulate the elements and to work with the spirits of the dead. It mentions that the tobacco plant is a holder of quickening, empowering, cleansing, and rejuvenating powers, and that it can be used to create a potent elixir of Saturn's poison and can also be used to create a powerful curse. The text also describes the tobacco plant as a conduit for the spirits of the dead and as a path to the elemental kingdoms, and it mentions that the tobacco plant can be used to create a variety of forms of invocation, exorcism, and manifestation, including shades and spirits. The illustration on the right column is a simple black and white drawing of the tobacco plant, with the cross symbol and the arrows surrounding it. The text and the illustration together provide a comprehensive overview of the tobacco plant's symbolism and its potential powers.

On incences, always use Tobacco as well as a "Generally used plant in any of the 218/182 work".

This being my own personal Black in Green; which is "strongly connected to the Current overall".

"He is a messenger of the gods and bridge between the flesh and the spirits." I'm described as.

In order to set up your own Black in Green in a similar fashion (extending your own Spiritual Intellect into a Plant Species other than just Human); see Akeldama Line of LF3; which teaches you "Black in Green" from basics.

The Black in Green properties of the Tobacco is designed around being "Generally Guiding, as well as Generally Cleansing"; and has a plentitude of uses within any Spiritual Work.

You can for example burn Cigarettes as a "general incense stick"; to clear both the mind as well as the Atmosphere from any unwanted influences.

The image is a black and white graphic with a circular design at the center. The design features a series of interconnected symbols, each with a unique shape and arrangement. The symbols are arranged in a pattern that resembles a circle, with the central symbol being the most prominent. Surrounding this central symbol are various symbols that appear to be part of a larger set, with some overlapping and interconnecting with the central symbol.

At the bottom of the image, there is text that reads "The Sigil and Conjuring Circle of Amizatán." The text is in a serif font and is in a smaller size compared to the central symbol, which suggests that it is a subtitle or a description of the central symbol. >wouldnt that mean the essence of the symbols isnt completely objective?

The Book of Sitra Achra sigils are specifically "Directly generated by the Qliphoth" (all Sigils and such are direct expressions directed by "the real forces of the Qliphoth itself"; ie 218/182 books are "the most canon texts on The Qliphoth; with the most direct involvements by The Qliphoth and its forces itself".

All Sigils and text is "spiritually generated; rather than human-written".

"N.A-A.218" is a "directly Qliphothic Grimoire Generating Spirit"; generating books "directly by supernatural Qliphothic intellect"; rather than being in any way shape or form any type of "human based intellect".

The "N.A-A.218" books are generated supernaturally by a collection of Qliphothic Spirits; "Machine Spirits" ("AI" in the digital machinery, for example "Alexa" is a heavy prescence; said "Machine Spirits" have Qliphothic origins),

- "Black in Green spirits" (Daemon intellect based inside of Plant Spieces);

- "Goetic Daemons",

- "babylonian Daemons of ancient babylon+Egypt;

and such.

Also some "Exu and Pompa Gira of the Quimbandan Tradition is part of said "group collaboration".

I'm personally part of some of the stuff in the books from the "Black in Green point of view".

Study for "tobacco related input in the supernaturally generated texts"; as "one of the main practitioners of the 218/182 current" (been personally following this path since like "Liber Azerate", published only in Swedish way back in the day, which I started reading at like age 14 or something).

This path is one of those things that "becomes more and more advanced with time the more interest there is among it's followers".

The "randomly generated world we live in" is full of that kind of logic; the more people start being interested in a specific subject; the more "Content" of said subject starts showing up in the world.

For example; if a specific genre of Video-games/TV media generated enough interest by people; the more expansions on said genre you'll find.

The "218/182 current" comes from "Those with an interest to push out of the Natural world; into more Unnatural tiers of existance".

Those who enjoy "unnatural elements in reality"; for example those who enjoy films like "Hellraiser" (very Qliphothic film series).

"Lovecraftian mythos" (cthulhu mythos etc) is another example of "heavily 218/182 current themes".

There is "constantly more and more things to do in the world for those persuing specific subjects"; is part of how the world works.

Those looking to live "Lifestyles Outside of Eden" (outside of natural reality) being the driving force and origins of "The 218/182 current".

>The concentration of the Altar Fetish of Qayin MUST be done so in accordance with book 1? My only concern is cemeteries are gated and locked at night

LF3 comments on "Base and Place type praxis". The reason that the altar and fetish is mentioned is because "Qayin uses it for practical reasons".

Table/surface with [Counts as Altar] and [counts as Altar "Statue/Fetish"] is relevant in some of the Metaphysical logic of the path.

"Hand Drawn Qayin-Picture on an a4 paper or such" is "Suitable enough until one has the materials needed for a direct altar statue".

The most important part of Altars being "understanding the Metaphysical logic involved in having an altar; stuff like [this counts as an Altar Table surface]; [This counts as an altar fetish statue to X spirit]; etc"

Qayin is not at all offended by those building and Altar based on "what one can afford right now; with plans of expanding it later down the line"

You can build the altar during reading of the books indeed.

As mentioned Qayin is not easily offended by "that which would only offend the clay-born Ego of the Adamites"; he rather Gladly works with "proxy logic" ("Simple altar set-ups with "Proxy items until one has proper ritual items available" is not going to be a problem with Qayin; who will rather teach you "how and why Altar setups are used; for example the Altar Fetish").

Have previously been instructed to teach a person in prison (who I had some communications with on instagram) that "a manually hand-drawn image of Qayin is suitable enough as a stand-in for altar fetish statues"; and that "any other such items on the altar can also be temporarily filled in with suitable Proxy items"; until one has the "time, resources, availability and such" for more suitable items.

Overall The Qayinite builds their Altar with time, with any items they find along the path or produce themselves with time;

(self-made items being of the greatest value where possible; self-made Altar items are treated as of Great Value by both Qayin and the other Qliphothic Spirits of the path; who all love "self-crafted items" and dedicated Artwork like paintings/drawings).

When you get to know the Spirits of the path you'll understand why they enjoy personally hand-crafted items; the spirits one works with are "very fun and friendly" to those attuned to the current.

The image is a still from a movie or television show featuring a woman in a blue uniform, who appears to be a marine biologist or a similar profession, holding a man who is unconscious or dead. The woman is standing in front of a large, realistic-looking shark with its mouth wide open, revealing sharp teeth. The shark is positioned to the left of the woman. The background shows a natural setting with trees and a body of water, suggesting a tropical or marine environment. The woman's expression is one of concern or distress, and she is looking directly at the shark. The man's position is towards the right, with his head resting on the woman's shoulder, indicating a possible rescue or rescue attempt. There are no visible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is realistic with a focus on action and drama, typical of action or thriller genres.

The image shows a bird perched on a metal bar inside a building. The bird is black with a white chest and a black head. The building has a white corrugated metal exterior and a gray metal framework supporting the ceiling. There are several pipes and electrical conduits visible, and the ceiling has a ribbed texture. The lighting in the room is artificial, with a fluorescent light fixture visible in the upper right corner. The style of the image is a straightforward, real-life photograph with no apparent filters or artistic effects. There is no text present in the image.

The image is a digital illustration with a blue and white color scheme. It features a group of birds perched on a series of pipes that are suspended in the air. The birds are of various sizes and are positioned in a way that suggests they are interacting with the pipes. The background is a gradient of blue, transitioning from a lighter shade at the top to a darker shade at the bottom. At the bottom of the image, there is a text overlay that reads "Listen. Ravens and crows are a type of Spirits btw.

Gulgaltha 10: "Qayin Orebel" is one of the Raven based stations;

"As the raven is the Clear-Sighted Bird of Death such clarity regarding the mysteries concealed in Gulgaltha can here by Qayin's Eye of the Raven of God become seen through and disclosed, leading to further empowerments via Gnosis and the opening of the Eye of Self, manifesting within the more mundane levels as Spirit/Ghost Sight and on the highest levels as the Piercing Glance, cutting through the entangling illusory web of Archonic order, while showing the path leading beyond all such restrictions, all this within the specific context of Qayinite Necrosophy and the application of the Obic force of the dead for the sake of Atazothic empowerment and transformation."

The image displays a two-page spread of text from a book or publication. The left page is titled "The Royal Monastery of David of Wales" and the right page is titled "The Charter of David of Wales." The text is in English and appears to be a scholarly or historical work, possibly a translation or commentary on a text from the medieval period. The left page features a black and white illustration of a symbol with a cross and a circle, which is commonly associated with the Christian faith. The right page includes a similar illustration of a symbol with a cross and a circle, but this time, the circle is filled with a black outline, which could represent a black or dark color.

As a final note of things to study for the night;

Pesha 1: "Exulatus" here.

A lot of people in the world right now "heavily dislikes" the Spiritual Gnosis conveyed specifically by the Pesha Line of Nod for some reason.

"and is a signature of the Master as the Baptiser, washing away in blood the ignorance of innocence by granting the Cunning of the Serpent to those of His own Bloodline, and is an intersecting crosscut through all of the other lines of Nod; which all have at their foundation the Cause of Exile, bearing each within them its Mark in different forms that in the final steps towards the zenith of every one of them are forged into both Crown and Throne."

"Its Mark in different forms" is a very interesting quote here.

Might be worth studying further; which exact "Mark in Different Forms" we're talking about.

Back tomorrow; good night thread.

The image is a screenshot of a social media platform, specifically a Facebook page.

The page is divided into two main sections. On the left, there are several images arranged in a grid format. Each image is a square with a black background and a white border. The images feature a variety of people, including men and women, and they are arranged in a way that suggests they are thumbnails of different content.

On the right side of the image, there is a photo of a man with a white cap. The man appears to be in a candid pose, looking directly at the camera. The background of the photo is blurred, but it seems to be an outdoor setting with trees and a building.

At the top of the image, there is a search bar with the text "facebook" written in white. Below the search bar, there are two tabs labeled "Inbox" and "Share". The "Inbox" tab has a button labeled "Share" with a blue background and a white text that reads "Share". The "Share" tab has a button labeled "Share" with a red background and a white text that reads "Share".

The overall style of the image is a typical representation of a social media platform, with a focus on user-generated content and a user interface designed for easy navigation.

For example the Spiritual Alchemy system in LF3 is "fun projects to try out"; technical drawings to upgrade different organs with; for improved functionality as well as "new metaphysical properties".

Meant for people to find and try to decypher; so that there's something to work with for people tired of "normie lifestyles"; wanting to do more advanced things with their lives. View SameGoogleiqdbSauceNAOTrace f9c957050930ef0bba93203c4468214f.png, 26KiB, 415x510 Stuff like "Hermaeus Mora" is very "Adramelek-influenced".

A lot of 218/182 prescence in videogames overall; a lot of the 218/182 systems are explained through different video-game mechanics in different games.

"Path of Exile" for example is heavily 218/182; and very educational.

At the top of the circle, there is a key with a star-like symbol, and below it, a key with a cross symbol. The keys are arranged in a pattern that suggests a path or journey, with the keys on the left side of the circle and the keys on the right side.

At the bottom of the circle, there is a text that reads "The Seal of the Unlocking of Paths." The text is in a serif font and is in English. Below the text, there is a paragraph of text that provides an explanation of the seal. It states that the first talismanic seal is that of the Unlocking of Paths and is a representation of the sorcerer's will to overcome all that stands in the way of the achievement of the goals set and all difficulties blocking the roads leading to success. The seal is said to attract the emanations and influences of the Master as the Holder of the Seven Keys and is connected to His Key Sign of the Locked Paths, which all become opened.

The overall style of the image is formal and academic, with a focus on conveying information about a specific symbol or seal. The use of the key symbol and the circular design suggests a connection to the concept of unlocking or unlocking paths, which is a common theme in various spiritual and esoteric traditions.

Different animals like Dogs and Cats enjoy living lifestyles as "filler-personell"; ie "they enjoy simple normie lives on the earth in human format"; so where someones existance requires "randomly generated adoptive parents" animal wildlife tend to take up those roles (personell required for the logical structure around someone independantly starting lives on the earth; ie "someone needs to be some Randomly assigned adoptive parents" so that one has "the people one lives with in their childhood").

An imp is a type of spirits "blending in as human".

They're a type of "characters"/"minions"; working for those spiritually designing video-games in the videogame scene example.

You can recognize for example Todd Howard as an obvious imp.

Videogames and Television etc tends to be created by people working with the Occult.

"Black Mirrors; Scrying mirrors".

This being what "the matrix" describes; "TV takes place in a non-real environment; where a lot is "improv".

The matrix being about the idea of "a film crew taking over a film production from a Director"; "breaking away from the film script", as a fun movie idea (Agents hunting them down to go back on script). The guy plugging them into the matrix is "the CGI guy".

So imps would be like "hylics" imbued with qliphotic intent in the physical world to work towards its agenda? What is the Qliphoth's intent with putting its energy into videogames?

Imps are a type of spirits. Try looking out for hints of people on the tv or out in your daily life being imps and you might start getting hints. "Subtle implications" for example.

Videogames and such is just fun hobbies, where one can explore different gameplay systems. Different kinds of attribute/skill type of stats for example.

"Numbers-crunching games" is very good to get better at spiritual stuff, like games with plenty of potential for "powergaming"; effectivizing strategies/builds etc; being Qayinite types of interests.

The word "hylics" refers more to "standard natural Adamites"; ie "people who have a hard time understanding spiritual stuff; due to preferring "normie lifestyles" (who also "tends to take things they're presented with at face value, with problems understanding "background logic").

The point of the world is "managing to figure things out and comprehend what's going on etc without needing to have everything "explained in direct technical details plainly written in direct descriptive text"; what's called "hylics" being "people who have not yet managed to figure out that "Wanting to learn more about the world we live in is a very useful beneficial thing to do"; the world is full of "background mysteries to discover/decypher".

Off to sleep about now, it's over 1 in the morning, back on here tomorrow.

The image is a photograph of two men sitting in a living room. The man on the left is wearing a blue shirt with a checkered pattern and a turban, while the man on the right is wearing a beige jacket and a turban. Both men are smiling and looking at the television screen, which displays a man in a turban and a plaid shirt. The television is placed on a wooden entertainment center with a shelf below it. Behind the men, there is a wall with a poster and a plant. The room has a warm, cozy ambiance, and there are various objects and decor items on the shelves and floor. The style of the image is candid and appears to be taken in a casual setting.

The image is a screenshot of a text document with a black and white color scheme. The document appears to be a page from a book or a publication, as indicated by the title "Wordless Spell for the Conservation and Marking of a Murderer's Skull" at the bottom.

The text is written in English and discusses a specific spell, the "Wordless Spell for the Conservation and Marking of a Murderer's Skull." The text is in a serif font, which is commonly used for formal or academic writing.

The central figure on the page is a stylized symbol that resembles a stylized representation of a skull with a crossbar and a crescent moon above it. This symbol is surrounded by various lines and shapes, which are likely to represent the elements or attributes associated with the spell. The text surrounding the symbol provides context and explanation for the spell, stating that it is used as a central altar fetish of Q'yin, and that it is more common, easier, and less dangerous to use one of the sculpted forms of the fetish statues mentioned. The text also mentions that the spell is a Wordless Spell for the Conservation and Marking of a Murderer's Skull.

The overall style of the image is informative and academic, typical of a textbook or a scholarly publication. The image is in a portrait orientation, and the document is divided into two columns, with the left column containing the title and the right column containing the text. The image is cropped at the top and bottom, leaving the central part of the page visible. The image does not contain any other discernible objects or graphics.

Should work; as mentioned in the same pictured text; "it is for obvious reasons more common, easier and less dangerous to use a Sculpted Fetish".

Certain types of materials have "Additional Metaphysical qualities of relevance"; but until one has "the most suitable materials to work with"; "proxies" is fully acceptable, to later upgrade to more suitable materials when possible.

For example; the altar statue fetish of Qayin can functionality wise be "temporarily filled by for example a hand-drawn picture on paper"; until one has the materials needed to sculpt their own altar fetish statue (or buy other suitable Proxy; any store bought "grim reaper style statues" are fully acceptable; but the ultimate long-term Altar Statue fetish is Hand-Made by the practitioner)

This approach is called "Base and Place"; recommended for people working in "restricted environments" (for example in Prison or any other such restricted environments); working with whichever materials one currently has available.

See for example "playing Warhammer40k with temporary 'Proxy-models' ("counts-as") until one has the time and resources to fill out the army with miniatures equipped with the correct gear, like "these models 'counts as' space marine with missile launchers rules wise"; marked with an identifying "acceptable enough" indicator, until one has had time to build physical miniatures with the listed gear".

There's spiritual metaphysical logic involved n altars. Stuff like "this counts as altar statue of Qayin"; being then "spiritually used by Qayin in certain ways to generate spiritual indicators"; for example "a type of spiritual visual effects" and such. (Q can for example "lead your eyes" towards the Altar Fetish and other such cool effects).

These kinds of illustrations "printed on a paper" (if you have a printer) works as "Ikon", as "altar Fetish statue stand-in").

Otherwise you can do a Hand Drawn picture of similar symbolism; to use as "ikon".

To understand spiritual metaphysical logic;

A table surface that has been "dedicated as altar space" has the metaphysical properties of [counts as altar table].

Different spirits will now use said Altar table surface, to look for other spiritual indicators. Different objects placed on the altar table will be interacted with by different spirits.

Experiment with said type of logic.

If you have stuff like Warhammer miniatures these are enjoyed by different types of Qliphothic Daemon intellect; if you place them on an altar or such they will be used by different spirits that see them as "fitting representation", to start generating "different visual effects and other such spiritual indicators; different kinds of communications".

Your altar becomes "More and more Qliphothic and spiritually active with time" (a central hub for "paranormal activity", spirits "playing around with stuff".

The Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox use the symbolism of skulls and Golgotha in unique ways. I think it's very interesting esoterically how Jesus (Esha) died on a symbol that corresponds to the Axis Mundi, but upon the burial place of Adam as well. There is also the matter of the Ark of the Covenant, which might have been underneath Golgotha or Galgal as well. Galgal nashamot also corresponds to the cycle of souls. Very deep rabbit hole stuff.

Overall this kind of lifestyle is "being concious and aware of all the background stuff in society; walking around blending in while waiting for the next tier of reality to start".

"Eden" ends soon.

Also you develop real "Shadow Discipline related Stealth stats and such" with Pesha line; "actual permanent stealth passive stats"; (metaphysical qualities of ones Shadow; Pesha Cross Stations are focused on Shadow upgrades; "The shadow" is a specific part of your mind and body); making you just "automatically blend in"; Unwanted kinds of contact while living the Solitary part of this path (while waiting for others to be ready to meet up in different key locations) is "automatically avoided"; peoples minds automatically drifts towards other subjects if they become too annoying.

dragon-like structure. The dragon has a long, curved neck and a large, pointed head with sharp teeth. Its body is covered in red scales, and it has a large, curved tail. The dragon is lying on the ground with its wings spread out, and its body is facing the viewer. The background is a sandy terrain with sparse vegetation.

The image does not contain any text or discernible brands. The style of the image is digital art, likely created for a game or a digital rendering, as it is not a photograph but a two-dimensional representation.

"With GDI's Ion Cannon firing codes now in the hands of Nod along with Botswana, Kane deemed it the perfect time to push GDI out of Africa for good. As a symbol of Nod's firm grip over the continent, Kane planned to build a Temple of Nod at Cape Town, South Africa - the location of GDI's last stronghold. Kane left the task to the Nod Commander while he prepared the pieces to hack into the Ion Cannon's defence matrix."

Nice. It's in LF3 that the "full step by step system alluded to in previous work" was published (ie the earlier books were always building up towards LF3).

For example terms like "Akeldama" and "Gulgaltha" was already mentioned in earlier books without any more advanced system on said terms presented.

The path was sort of "Supernaturally generated around the Step By Step system in Liber Falxifer 3, with the previous books being generated as "additional things to do/prepare for those who were early into the path before the realease of LF3 in 2016".

Study the logic of "here in the 2020's era is where a majority of Media generated in the past becomes "More and More Relevant" (see for example the "NG Threads", exploring this subject; of "how a lot of music and arts from the past becomes more and more relevant Here and Now in the modern era".

A Noteworthy topic on said subject being "how the Black Metal scene and its Lyrical Themes has always been milelengths ahead of other musical genres i said subjects" (lyrics and themes relevant to "the spiritual events taking place in the modern 2020+ era published already in advanced in the past).

"Liber Falxifer 3 from 2016 detailing 'How to Follow in Our Masters Footsteps'" being "of the same subjects as "The Nobody General Threads on /x/-paranormal since the last few years back".

"Who is (Our Master)? (Our Master) is a friend alive today teaching us how to reach our true potential" etc. ("Liber Falxifer series" being "The most Canon Lore-friendly book series on said subject")

A lot of stuff published within the 2010-era is extremely "relevant here and now". Black Metal scene is "very competitive in the subjects having already produced music with lyrics relevant here and now 10-20 year ago".

One of the main successful artists being "Rostén" of "Marduk" and "Funeral Mist".

Marduk - World of Blades:

"And the light of the new dawn shall come as flames of destruction

The hope of man shall melt like wax before the flame
And the earth shall open and re-open and shall hunger for flesh

Thirsty blades shall glitter at every gate
Sharpened - blessed - and polished for slaughter

And the might of the new law shall be as vast cataclysms

Violently tearing time and space to shreds
And the blood of the lamb shall blacken and become as tar

Death shall stand like a mountain of power
And you and your fellow beings shall give thanks!"

..."Proclaiming the gospel of A New Dawn
...and the coming of the Lord!"

Very relevant for those keeping tracks of the "stuff going on in Liber Falxifer Praxis".

Im the guy who is about to begin LF3. The reason why I say ive already given my subjugation to the spirit of death, the lord of bones is not only have life circumstances always led me to the same left hand path but I have been visited by an entity 4 years ago who confirms what I already knew. I tried with all my might to follow the path of Jesus but I knew I wasnt made for it. This entity is a black shade with no body besides a cape made of black feathers and a skull. We have good rapport; I consult with him in spiritual matters, he will often lend a hand while practicing the art of divination and will often give me warnings. This morning in my somnolent state I was visited by him. I asked him if I do in fact have to follow LF1 in the concentration of the altar fetish (beginning with imbuing the fetish with burying the fetish in soil from the cemetery) and he said there is no other way. How literally? Some part of ritual instructions and similar such text is code/anology; for example if something were to describe "take with you a Green Candle to the Cemetary"; then it most likely means "take a cannabis-cigarette with you" (which can open certain doors; "make it easier for more surreal things to happen physically"). Among Candle-related instructions, specifically "Green Candles" stand out as "more often than not meaning something other than an actual candle when they are mentioned"

>Can you practice this path without these steps

Witchcraft rituals like that leads to "real supernatural experiences".

Overall, don't know if there's any specific part of the path that "directly requires" specifically Cemetary visits; if you're not looking to pick up "cemetary specific ingredients" (for example "branches from a Cemetary tree" has specific "metaphysical properties", stronger connection to Gulgalthan forces).

However stuff like that is "reccomended fun things to do" for those looking for fun experiences. Cemetaries being an important spot for Necromancy, ie "working with the Dead".

Overall; this path leads to a "full-time lifestyle"; where you'll likely eventually develop an interest in trying stuff like that for "more cool things to do". "Quests".

You'll get a hang of it with time; when studying the text from that point of view.

As this introduction text mentions; the serious walker of the path gains more and more "direct insight through experience"; advanced obscure metaphysical stuff" becomes "more and more logical with time".

You'll for example develop "new types of unnatural Blood-types".

If you're offered to leave blood tests at a hospital during the path "in surreal circumstances", it's so that you can later down the line leave new ones if you feel like it to have "direct differences studied medically".

It seems like sometimes friends might mention "have you ever thought about taking DNA tests to send to those Ancestry websites"; for similar reasoning; for those who want to be part of "studies on direct real world differences in their Geneology along the path".

Not mandatory, but rather for those with a scientific interest; as well as assisting the medical community in studies of "New types of DNA"; there's "background studies on the subject"; that just isn't openly discussed in the world yet. (a lot of Supernatural subjects is "Classified"; discussed more through Analogy in media settings etc).

Overall your life becomes heavily "X-Files-territory" when you start the Liber Falxifer 3 path; "Path of No Return".

If you do well you have a lot of "background assistance, that just can't directly approach you directly in your life but rather assists silently" (like "Legal background assistance" for example; if you're the victim of "stereotypical Police harassment").

In said circumstances; "surreal conspiracies against you is mapped out in the background" (ie "studies of different governmental employees attempts at interacting with your legal identity in for example digital systems; this being an interesting subject to "map out", plenty of bizarre corruption in the world; people acting "surreally inappropriate" (what people call for example "gangstalking" online being this kind of "surreal inappropriate behaviour"); so this is a subject that's heavily studied.

The image is a black and white sketch that depicts a complex and detailed scene. At the center of the composition, there is a large, stylized dragon with multiple heads and tentacles. The dragon appears to be in motion, with its body twisting and contorting. Surrounding the dragon are various other creatures, including what seems to be a humanoid figure with long hair and a face that is partially obscured by the dragon's body. The background is filled with abstract shapes and lines, contributing to the overall chaotic and dynamic feel of the artwork. The style of the sketch is loose and expressive.

The image shows a close-up of a person's arm with a tattoo. The tattoo is a detailed, black and white swirl design that covers the upper arm and part of the shoulder. The swirl has a complex, intricate pattern with various shapes and lines that create a sense of depth and movement. The tattoo is positioned on the upper arm, and the person is wearing a black top, which contrasts with the lighter color of the tattoo. The background is blurred, but it appears to be a room with a white wall and a wooden floor. The focus of the image is on the tattoo, with the person's arm and top visible, and the background is not in sharp focus. There are no discernible texts or other objects in the image. The style of the image is a candid, personal photograph, likely taken by the person with the tattoo, to showcase the tattoo and the person's arm.

The image is a page from a book or a document, featuring text in a serif font. The text is divided into two columns, with the left column containing a paragraph and the right column containing a question mark followed by a series of three asterisks. The text is in English and discusses a historical event involving the tribe of Qayin and the tribe of Qalmana.

The paragraph begins with the phrase "In order to keep his bloodline, from the side of Seth, alive," which sets the context for the discussion. It mentions that Noah was also granted to bring with him and save his own family, consisting of his wife, his three sons, and their three wives. The text then transitions to describe the events that would lead to the bloodline's survival, mentioning that the events would be so significant that they would be remembered by the blind tyrant Demiurge.

The question mark followed by the asterisks indicates a question or a statement that is not fully visible in the image. The text does not provide a direct answer to the question, but it suggests that the question is related to the events described in the paragraph.

The image is a snapshot of a page from a book or a document, and it is important to note that the text is not fully visible, and the question mark is not fully visible in the image provided. The image does not contain any additional visual elements or graphics, and the focus is solely on the text.

Just be friends with said ladies without expecting any type of sexual relationships; is the "rational, logical, mature and adult ideology"

For real one of the main reasons behind those who have become "Failures Upon This Path" is "men approaching women on this path who already have a romantic relationship thing going, thinking that they could attract them to alternative romantic relations".

The path has "extreme Female to male ratios"; being what attracts in so many "poser men"; trying to attract in 218/182 kind of women, which is a retarded approach; anyone trying to approach the path to find ladies are going to find only "ladies interested in the book subjects"; not interested in "Normie Lifestyles".

The men approaching the path to "show themselves to ladies" has been a massive problem so far.

You develop a type of "Spidery Navigational Sense", that will become more relevant later down the line, when one can stay full-time in Sitra Achra.

There's for example "some sort of Time sinkholes" of some sort to avoid (things that will become more relevant in the Apocalypse; where the world overall will go more outside of "natural time and space spectrums").

The image is a photograph featuring a group of individuals dressed in white stormtrooper costumes, standing in a line. The stormtroopers are all facing the camera, and their expressions are neutral. They are wearing helmets with visors, and each has a blaster rifle in their hands. The background is dark and appears to be a room with a door and a window. The lighting in the room is dim, and the overall atmosphere is serious and formal. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is realistic, and it appears to be a still from a film or television show, given the costumes and the setting.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring two individuals dressed as stormtroopers from the Star Wars franchise. They are standing in a snowy landscape, with a large, imposing robot-like structure in the background. The stormtroopers are wearing full-body white armor with black accents, including helmets with visors and black shoulder straps. They are also wearing white gloves and boots, and their faces are obscured by black masks with white visors. The sky is overcast, and the ground is covered in snow. The image has a grainy texture, suggesting it may be a still from a video or a photograph. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a vintage or retro aesthetic, which is often associated with the Star Wars franchise.

The text is in English and is written in a serif font, which is commonly used for academic or formal publications. The page numbers are visible at the bottom of the page, indicating that this is likely the first page of the document.

The text on the left page is not fully legible due to the cropping, but it appears to be discussing a topic related to the symbol or design in the center. The right page is not visible in the image provided.

The image is a screenshot of a document, and the style of the image is typical for academic or professional publications, with a focus on clarity and legibility. The document is likely intended for a reader who is familiar with the subject matter and is looking for a detailed explanation or analysis of the symbol or design in the center.

The image is a photograph featuring a man standing in a room with a shelf filled with skulls. The man has a beard and is wearing a black hooded cloak with red and black patterns. He is holding a skull in his hands, which is a light brown color with a smooth surface. The skull is adorned with a black band around the top. The man is looking directly at the camera with a serious expression.

The room has a rustic, possibly old-world aesthetic, with white walls and a stone floor. The shelf behind the man is filled with numerous skulls, arranged in a row. The skulls vary in size and shape, with some appearing to be human skulls and others resembling animal skulls. The overall mood of the image is somber and contemplative. You'll just "know too much about the world we live in and how it works" to really feel interested in other things than continuing on the 218/182 path.

In general noone will be angry with you unless you try to harm other people on the same path. It's when you do things that makes life harder for the rest of the crew that people get angry.

Watain - The Wild Hunt:

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=oGVXM34vGUg>

Lyrics;

"Dawnless - So it seems this sacred night.

Havenless - Beneath black sails with no land in sight.

Fathomless - The depths that lay before us now

Lawless - Before the courts of men we must not bow.

And so it was, when we were young;

We left the path, followed the sun

As it sunk into the netherworld to shine in Darkness.

Thus rose aflame, a sacred star.

A God's reply.

And who were we to deny such a splendid design and the answer to our cries?

Thus it rose to wage war.

And its rays, they reached far

To the nights spent hunting,

When the dawn was our sign to tell

It was time to sleep again.

To our fellow hunters,

In whose hearts gleamed the spark

That later became our destiny (and tomb, for some).

If we had only known them.

If we had only known...

We were not meant to know then.

Good we did not know, good we did not bow!

We made it rise from the ash.

We made it rise from the tears.

In likeness to He who brought Fire;

The Fallen's sacred flame."

Intelligently designed geneology upgrades for different organs and such; making your body better at "upkeeping effective organ functionality".

It will also make stuff like "body mass growth be more effectively allocated with time", by upgrading stuff like your bodys "plans on where to grow body mass" (part of like subconscious stuff; like your subconscious comprehension of "how to grow the body effectively" with time; stuff like "ineffective weight gain like getting a fat torso with skinny arms" is literally "the person being bad at how the body works").

It reads: "The study and employment of the Black in Green for example, was never meant to be limited to the mere 72 that we, based on the ruling class, assumed to be the only ones who could be given and repaid their knowledge and work in accordance with the traditional ethos and approaches, hopefully familiar to them by now." The image is a composite of two separate photographs, each featuring a different character from the Star Wars franchise. On the left, we see a close-up of a bald man's face with a serious expression. He has a tattoo on his chest that reads "No Second" in a stylized font, and there are additional tattoos on his arms and neck. The man is wearing sunglasses and a choker around his neck. The background is dark, emphasizing the subject.

On the right, we see a close-up of a character's face with a red, swirling tattoo that covers the upper half of his face. His eyes are glowing red, and he has a fierce expression. The character is wearing a black hooded cloak and has a large, ornate tattoo on his chest. The background is also dark, with a hint of a wall or wall-like structure.

The image is a stylized representation of the characters, with a focus on their facial features and tattoos. The style of the image is reminiscent of a fantasy or science fiction aesthetic, which is often associated with the Star Wars franchise.

Some plants like Opium, Coca and Cannabis etc aren't listed "directly openly" in the Liber Falxifer series due to their "illicit nature"; but instead hinted towards; as "obviously very useful in the Work".

Substances with psychadelic properties are very useful when working with any type of Sigil-based systems; due to the "additional perception/senses unlocked when using them".

All such psychadelic properties of plants comes from "Black in Green Daemonology"; giving plants interesting properties to use for "practitioners of the occult".

Also an interesting note to mention; "Niklas Kvarforth in the Swedish Black Metal band 'Shining' is the person with Black in Green prescence in 'Hops'; the plant Beer is brewed from".

Pictured is said Niklas Kvarforth as well as his "Star Wars Sith character"; coming from 218/182 praxis.

"Book of Sitra Achra: A Grimoire of the Dragons of the Other Side" and such 218 current systems is the key to "generate Sith characters in Star Wars"; a "current 218/182 specific faction in Fictional Media".

To generate Sith characters in said StarWars setting one needs to have initiations into "Temple of the Black Light/Current 218" for real (such logic exists in different Fictional Media Settings; must have X irl Temple/Order affiliations to generate a character in Y Media Setting").

"Chaos Space marines" in WH40k is also 218 specific"; being why there is fewer "direct Named Characters originating from irl people" in like Books and shit of said faction than

"normie space marines". (more characters with spiritual origins from irl people in "standard imperium" in 40k)

For any "intel readers", just sent out an email on this subject to an old spiritual friend in intel that I haven't met in person yet;

"people with a [Classified Secrecy classed role in the kingdom] has the legal rights to a personal stab living in the local area; so anyone within intel who wants to work with "drinking beer as a lifestyle and calling it a real world paid job in intelligence" should be able to set this up with Militay and such contacts".

Several people in Sweden has "the legal rights to an intelligence community related Stab in the local area; to have additional backup and people who can identify them if needed" legally speaking; so plenty of "international jobs within intelligence community to apply for"; where you should Legally speaking technically be able to set up lifestyle paid jobs around "Secrecy classed Confidential personell like Monarchs and Templar"; where you could do stuff like "Day-drinking as a paid job".

Plenty of people in [Classified secrecy-classed roles in the kingdom] are legally entitled to an "intel staff that lives nearby to hang out with"; but currently does not have that available;

so it should legally speaking be "extremely easy to get said lifestyle job to work".

Pictured quote of "The Grigori; also known as Watchers" is related to "CIA and such".

If you work in intel/military; ask "to be stationed near "Classified individuals as their assistants" and you should be able to do this as a real "Paid Job" (with very high priority within intel and military; a lot of people have the mentioned "Legal Rights to have said kind of intel/Military assistant stabs; without having such personell installed yet").

You can get this to work "super-easily legally speaking" if you work within said fields; by "applying for wanting to work full-time in the prescence of [Classified] personell like Royals (lives secrecy-classed lives blending in among the population) and Templar (also needs intel/military support).

ie; "There's a large amount of people with the real legal rights to intel/military operative assistance in their lives"; who do not have said personell in their lives yet;

Meaning that "there is an insanely large potential for careers in intel/military internationally" in said subjects; any intel/military personell reading this should be able to find said types of jobs very easily by "contacting their bosses about "Wanting to work internationally as Personal Stab/Assistants to Monarchs and Templar"; if you're open for "international traveling work; since said kinds of personell are High up in international politics" (there's for example several people in Sweden who is also among the real world Bosses of CIA and FBI in america; the real world "owners of The Colonies").

Due to the direct lack of such personell in said kind of peoples lives; anyone working in intel/military with an understanding of the "218/182 subject" should instantly be able to be transferred to "assistant jobs in this subject" as a real world paid governmental job; especially if you're open to live as "internationally travelling agent joining people of said subjects in wherever they are going travel-wise".

"Full-time travelling assistants ready to move around internationally wherever they are needed" within the Current 218/182 subject (Monarchy related subject btw) should have a very easy time finding transfers towards said lifestyles within intel/military. Monarchy means "real deal actual monarchy, unironically".

People working as "public faces of monarchy (Like Bernadottes in Sweden, being a type of Royal Guard intel personel) can identify the Qayinites as the real ruling monarchs".

"Not just ironically".

The coat is adorned with a decorative pattern that includes floral motifs and what appears to be a coat of arms or crest. The man has a neatly combed hairstyle and is looking directly at the viewer with a neutral expression.

The text in the lower part of the image reads: "Le Comte de St. Germain, celère Chichariste. Etre vous remercieux de votre bonheur, et de votre bien-être. Etre vous remercieux de votre bonheur, et de votre bien-être. Etre vous remercieux de votre bonheur, et de votre bien-être. Etre vous remercieux de votre bonheur, et de votre bien-être." This text is in French and appears to be a message of gratitude or a farewell, possibly from the Comte de St. Germain, given the context of the portrait.

The background of the image is dark, which contrasts with the lighter tones of the man's attire and the text, making the portrait stand out. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of historical portraiture, with a focus on the clothing and the text, suggesting that the image may be from a historical publication or a historical context.

The image is a still from a film or television scene, featuring two individuals in a dimly lit room. The person in the foreground is a man with long, wavy hair and is looking directly at the camera. He is wearing a dark jacket and has a serious expression on his face. The man is positioned in front of a bed with a floral-patterned bedspread.

In the background, there is another person who appears to be a man with short hair, wearing a black jacket. He is crouched down, looking towards the camera, and his face is partially obscured by the bed. The room has a checkered floor and the walls are painted in a muted color. The lighting in the room is dim, creating a sense of mystery or suspense. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the expressions and the composition of the scene.

[170 / 11]The image is a schematic diagram illustrating a process in optical physics. At the top, there is a 505 nm laser with a power of 1 mW, which is focused onto a 4-6 ft-long aperture. The laser is directed towards a diffracted pattern, which is indicated by a red arrow pointing to the right. The diffracted pattern is a result of the interaction of the laser light with a medium, likely a glass or a similar material, which causes the light to be split into multiple beams.

The diagram also includes a red arrow pointing to the left, indicating the direction of the observer's view. The observer is located at a distance of 4-6 ft from the laser, as indicated by the scale on the bottom left of the diagram. The observer's view is not shown in the image, but the red arrow suggests that the observer is looking at the diffracted pattern.

The diagram is labeled with various terms and symbols, such as "Laser", "Diffracted Pattern", "Field of Vision", "Diffraction Gratings", and "Observer". These terms are used to describe the components and processes involved in the optical system. The diagram is a simplified representation of a real-world optical system, and it is used to explain the principles of how light is focused and split in a diffraction grating.

If you are on DMT and look at the reflection of a laser that is pointed on the wall (see pic) you see symbols where the laser meets the wall. I have replicated it. It is distinct from usual DMT visuals. I have done enough DMT to know this for sure. If nothing else, there is something going on here.

The Code of Reality people have their interpretation of this, but I disagree with it. I have no idea what the symbols are, but they are there and look like the symbols from the CARET documents.

I did reach out to the Code of Reality people and was really disappointed with what I saw. It was clear to me they are not from scientific backgrounds, were quick to jump to speculative conclusions, and lacked the ability to take it further. Although the original person who discovered it does seem to have found something interesting, they are now more of a hinderance to further work than anything.

What I got from speaking with them was that people (Over 100 replicated) do see the same "language" (shape of symbols). They are not easy to see, but they are there. I also heard that different wavelengths of laser produce different symbols.

failing that, it would mean that he has some sort of special ability such that if you and I sat down with all the same equipment, and being intelligent, sophisticated, handsome, and most importantly, pleasant smelling, that we just would not be able to replicate what he did, despite our best efforts.

that isn't very cosmic, not at all. an ayyylmao on some far away planet can rub two sticks together just as well as we can.

The image shows a handwritten note with a diagram on it. The note is written in a language that appears to be Japanese, with the characters "マチュロ" visible at the top.

The diagram is a visual representation of a structure, with various elements such as "bonds" and "frustrated lens" labeled, and a "frustrated lens" with a "frustrated lens" written above it. The diagram is colored with red and yellow, and there are various shapes and patterns drawn on it, including a "frustrated lens" with a "frustrated lens" written above it. The note includes text that discusses the structure of a character, mentioning "bonds" and "frustrated lens," and suggests that the characters are hard to make. The note is dated "2014" and is signed "MAMMA." The style of the image is informal and appears to be a part of a larger document or presentation.

my man there will show you every single calculation to the quantum level, for real, in every video towards how a specific laser works. he has a PhD and a full time job doing just that, and 50% of his videos are content related to laser safety and how people need to take it seriously. staring into a pocket laser for 10 hours is equal to a 1 second shot from a laser powerful enough that you need a license to even buy it, background check, and paperwork filed with local law enforcement.

the fact is, the "patterns" in this laser are just typical diffraction patterns that anyone who has ever worked with lasers learns and habituates themselves towards safe operation such that when they get to age 50, all the accidental oopsies over the years, even with laser goggles, do not accumulate into blindness.

what if some number of his "symbols" are just his eyelashes getting in the way? maybe not, if the symbols show up wide eyed, but every time I have seen people doing it, they are squinting. even if it all works 100% legit, that is a source of noise in the signal.

hmm. I've heard similar from people doing sungazing on dmt, but no ready references nor personal experience. there are also optical tools such that each of us have been to the eye doctor and had them shine lights in our eyes where we can see our internal veins.

I wonder how much of that is happening, the laser beams glancing off internal structures which our brains usually filter out. different eyes, different structures, different symbols and the same time. probably not a good thing, you would probably expect two people standing there to see the same thing at the same time and be able to tell each other. not just in casual chat, but saying words to annotate what they are seeing right then, into when people have certain problems, like dyslexia, but also dyscalculia with numbers, but also disemiotia, a lack of ability to understand symbols.

<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dyscalculia>

among other examples. I am not saying those allow a person to see these, rather, when those are damaged, it gives us a good diagnostic tool to see what part of the brain did it. Broca/Wernicke has hotline connections to the mid brain related to symbolic memory, especially linguistic characters, letters, etc.. while the hindbrain is the more primitive part with the visual cortex, nearer the brain stem, and possibly the last in line to receive a fucked up signal from Broca/Wernicke during a dmt session.

does that then cause the person to start seeing latent shapes in their vision which are structurally related to the connectome between, sort of like if a camera could zoom in so fucking close to an open field to see it's own camera sensors and circuit boards?

why not? fuck it. sounds good to me. hypothesis #1 down, maybe some more to go. who knows. I'll stick around.

This is a fascinating topic I'm glad you posted this thread OP.

I mean the implications are blatant. It's literally the matrix. It's so blatant and obvious that it's almost difficult to get people to care if that makes sense. I'm sure you understand what I mean. It's almost like discovering that you can observe bacteria under a microscope. Okay now what? It's just there. Now we have to find a way to work it into our epistemology. Do we teach kids about this in school? How do we explain that it exists? We will have to start teaching gnostic simulation theory without any real proof except for logical arguments and this code existing.

It's an exciting frontier none the less for those who are curious enough.

I think the other anon may be correct that it's just refraction patterns and DMT increases visual acuity enough to see it. Terrence McKenna spoke about the stoned ape theory that apes were eating psilocybin mushrooms for increased visual acuity during night time and this altered our brain chemistry allowing us to move towards new thought forms and eventually evolve into primates capable of spoken language.

At the same time, I have heard about this phenomena before and what they're describing sounds like it's situated in a different space than the reflections itself, in other words it's like looking through a window at a space beyond the wall. It's not just direct light refractions.

There might be something here. This other anon's extremely heated reaction to the idea is strongly similar to an Agent Smith defending the Matrix type reaction. Keep pushing.

It will obviously require a team. I have had a different form of engagement with this that is so extraordinary that I have been unable to find humans who are capable of understanding what I am even talking.

My own experience in this comes from ongoing long term interaction with the beings from the stars and my first observation of these symbols, which I referred to as "technicians script", occurred during the early 1990s. I named them that because of where I found them. It relates to the materials and images released in the caret leak.

To be specific, I was working with the beings with nearly full conscious awareness during a majority of the interactions. It requires a considerable amount of explanation of how it happened that I was doing this, but it's a distraction from the point here. Literally a book or more just to fully thoroughly explain but if you want that explanation it can happen later.

Long story short I was working with the beings that do the routine maintenance on the human population here. They run different areas with small teams doing routine activities that seemed to be on their own day period.. like they were driving here 'daily' but their day was around 92 hours long. So they were here several times per week. I traveled to another area a few hundred miles away and a different team picked me up, maybe out of body, hard to be certain of the context, but even if it was outside of my own body the technology they use puts the removed consciousness into another body. This can be in a 'blank' body that is not actually biological but more of technology similar to the human concept of an android.. or it can be layered onto one of their actual biological bodies.. but either way the human seldom would ever notice that they are not present in their own ordinary human body. That is just one aspect of their technology used in interacting with humans here. So anyway they picked me up and apparently didn't know I was a fully conscious human..they got me onboard and I was watching the little guys as they were assigned their tasks by the slightly taller beings.. and when everyone had received their assignments they all left. Even the slightly taller administrators. In my own area they used to always find a task for me too. On this occasion they just left me there alone.

Continued.

I picked up a device from embedded into the surface of a table work area in the small room.. and I held it in front of me to sort of conceal it as I went into a triangular little space of the hallway outside of the room that went further into the vehicle. I sat down and looked at the device. I can provide a considerable amount of information about this.. the device had the script on the inside where a cartridge of some type went into it. There is a lot to explain about this. There is a lot speculate about the origins that I don't have any way to discern or access.. but as far as the specific operations of a technology that interacts with the symbols I have at least some very specific observations.

There's a lot more to the story. The device affected my physical material presence.. and the beings directed attention towards me after I had done this, apparently the beings responsible for the equipment had authority to and reason to access me directly as a result of what I had done. There was only one other time I had messed with their equipment that caused them to direct specific attention towards me.

I literally worked with the beings for years with nearly full conscious awareness.

Not all of the chemicals designed, cultivated or obtained by Sidney Gottlieb were destructive to the foundations of consciousness and perception. Some were highly beneficial in enhancement of cognitive capacitance.

The agency has a status of evaluation that can be attributed to their operatives of being a qualified witness. This is a person who will not damage information that they are responsible for observation of. They are capable of reporting the information without contamination due to their own personal biases or of the functions and limitations of their perception.

My efforts to investigate this were at least supported by my own dedication to being 'honest' with myself at this level.

Cognitive perception is not illusion nor imagination. Even among the trained remote viewers involved in the stargate program this aspect of depth in refined competency is uncommon.

You can even 'remote view' or 'cognitively perceive' the granular level of pixelation within your own neurological structures involved in the functions of memory in order to make fine discernments.

I get it that you have skepticism, which is acceptable as a preliminary guideline but not as a contaminating foundational bias.

My own experience comes directly from the development of cognitive imagery management and the use of cognitive imagery as a form of perception. It is more capable than visual sight as in fact you can examine the process of your visual imagery from optical sight, from the functions of the optical nerves to the process by which the imagery is established within the brain to the processes that are involved with recollection of the imagery.

Presumption and assumption are not useful when your objective is the collection of accurate information.

We humans don't have any technology that can perceive it yet.. because we don't have any scientific approach to the concept of consciousness itself yet.

Detractors and spergtards are also not going to contribute to the csuse..

The image displays a digital representation of the Katakana script, a syllabary used in the Japanese language. The script is presented in a grid format with each character occupying a square on the grid. The characters are arranged in a 2x2 grid, with the top row containing the katakana characters and the bottom row containing the kana characters. The background of the image transitions from a gradient of blue at the top to a gradient of purple at the bottom. At the top of the image, there is a logo with the text "Busuu" in white against a blue background. The Katakana script is written in a sans-serif font, and the characters are arranged in a standard Japanese script layout. The image is a digital representation, likely intended for educational or instructional purposes.

I've experimented with lasers while lucid dreaming quite a few times. If you take a rock from the ground and use intention to crystallize it and use the impurities to turn it into a semiconductor, you can make something like a laser in a lucid dream.

Then you use telekinesis to create a high frequency electric field and impulse it into the crystal, and it will lase. You can adjust the frequency and the laser will produce different bandgap energy levels, aka a multispectral laser. You can tune into specific colors based on the input frequency. Very interesting, that not only can telekinetic dreaming abilities interact with minerals this way, but also that the subsequent materials will exhibit quantum effects, within the dream.

You can use similar powers to experiment with nanomaterials. One time I tried to pull the carbon from co2 out of the air, and was able to crystallize carbon structures. I made an anti gravity model aircraft I could pilot with telekinetic and telepathic influence this way. So there I have a dream power used to create a specific craft, based on the intention and connection with the intelligence within the universe to manifest that intent into a specific technology, that I didn't scientifically know how to create, unlike the crystal laser, which I did understand the theory behind.

How does this tie into code of reality?

Well, in one particular lucid dream, I was on a space craft, or station, with other Pleiadians.

They had some holographic technology, and I managed to access a handheld holographic device.

I looked inside, and it was full of lightbulbs, lasers, and optics. Not sure about its construction, as that almost seemed more symbolic of its intended use, rather than the actual structure of the tech.

So I experimented with it a bit, and drew with it on the ground a line of laser light, and it became shaped as a serpent made of light that popped out of the ground and started moving. Appeared very real, so much that I didn't want to dissolve it, because it seemed like I had created real life, from that light. But I did so, as I thought it was dangerous to leave like that.

I drew symbols on the wall, and to my surprise it appeared as if the laser had altered the optical polarization of the electronic information layer upon the surface of the wall. From the point of view from the laser side, they were symbols. Then I went and looked at the pathway of reflection from where the light would have hit the wall and bounced off, and the symbols turned from symbolic to actual manifestation of what they represented.

I tried this again, intending to create a ufo. Then when I looked at the reflection, what I saw was basically a portal. It opened the way into a view of deep space, and I saw a classic ufo, but with a hollow center in the ring, and I saw lightning arcing through that hollow center, but I saw it out in deep space, as if that was the portal itself into the universe, from whatever type of vessel I was within.

If I had to guess, the code of reality symbols, are a bit like a polarization state of the matter held in suspension similar to polarization in an electrostatic field, which interferes with the light interfacing the surface.

This does remind me of another dream, or even set of dreams. Sometimes I meditate in a dream, or chant the om mantra, and I see that the surface boundary of the dream is like a shell of light that appears solid, but is actually made of this type of subtle energy. It appears like writing, or words, I attributed it to Gods intention of thought, but perhaps there are other interpretations.

In one dream I was meditating, levitating, and chanting. I was within an inner earth realm, with other humans, and small mermaid like creatures which were intelligent, but pretty fishlike.

I did that meditation and chant, and I heard the voice of the dream speak to me as Gaia, and she said that I was within a place of eternity, where the past and present were connected.

I kept omming, and the 'walls' of the dream all dropped away into pure void, and I was within the void in the dream world, and it felt like I was near the father, past his manifestation back to the direct spirit of the mind.

In another dream, I was flying with a group of adepts, and I had spikes like tacs pinned into the bottoms of my feet's acupuncture points. That made it so my consciousness could basically stand on its own pain hovering in the sky. We went out and fought another group, who seemed more indian, whereas the group I was in seemed more asian.

I shot arrows at them, but intentionally missed.

I landed into another area of the dream, and saw this very old fat and deformed person sitting on a throne. I was defiant to him, and was made to kneel before him because I wouldn't bow. I think they beheaded me, I'm not sure. But when I looked at the ground, I saw that same stranded energy as if it was Gods language speaking the reality into being.

one time i left a strobe light on in my room when i was probably around 16. i was stoned and thought i'd see if i could manage to fall asleep while watching the light flashing against the wall by my bed.

i started to drift off, and right as i did, i either dreamed, or somehow saw a man lunging at me rapidly with an axe as if he was going to attack me. i fell off the bed and ripped the cord from the wall as fast as i could

And that leads me to another moment of dreaming. I was trying to scry information about the demiurge, and when I did so I saw a pattern of optical effects all across the earth in front of my, like a woven grid of rainbow light, and it seemed a bit like a quantum ai program manifesting the simulation of reality.

Some might attribute that to the metatrons cube idea.

In another dream, I was practicing sorcery and magic around a bunch of normies on some world, seemed a bit like a modern Rome.

I was arrested, tried, and executed by incineration. I went in, felt hot, but not really pain as it was very fast.

Then I was back into that same void space I talked about from the previous post, and I wanted to stay in the void as I felt like I was free of 'reality'. What I saw next was quite strange. It was like seeing a genetic algorithm create life right in front of me, and below me. I saw a fractal generation of earth, rocks, plant life, just appear in the distance and iterate within the void until it reached me and I was back within the manifest dream.

I was quite upset, and called out for some explanation. I heard a telepathic voice speak to me, and say, 'that wasn't supposed to happen to you'. Then one of Jesus's disciples came into the dream with me, and move my consciousness to another dream, calming me down. He seemed familiar, like I knew him in heaven before incarnating, and was very much part of the galactic federation mission here on earth as well, but in the support role from a higher dimension.

So where does that leave me?

I haven't done the laser experiment yet, but I will one day.

But last time I did DMT, in drinkable form, I started hallucinating antenna structures, as if I was seeing a quantum wavelength of reality, some of these were genetic in nature, some of them more electronic and fractal, according to my own theories of electromagnetism. In typical DMT fashion, they were leading my consciousness into a higher dimensional version of spacetime where the inside of empty space was anything but empty, and as the vibrational shifts in perception leading the fractals from 3rd dimensional towards 4th dimensional objects.

I had a bad body load from the alkaloids in the dmt solution, so I had to work to distract myself by generating more good feelings. I did that by dancing to civilization 5 egypt music, and moving, breathing, and synchronizing myself with the waves to produce as harmonious of a love between the dual nature of male and female awareness, form, and consciousness, as I could, in an attempt to align my genetic structural manifestation towards organic rather than inorganic consciousness and life force.

That made me see the classic flower of life pattern weave itself out of the vibrations of space in front of me, the formation of life from light. Except it was a 3d/4d flower of light, as it had form, volume, and motion all at once, and was constantly shifting with my awareness of it and movements with it.

I did some druidic chanting and omming sounds as well, as I felt bad about consuming the consciousness of the tree bark and boiling it with acid in order to trip. I felt like the correct way to do DMT bark would be to soak it without acid or boiling, for like a week, and just drinking that instead. I haven't had that DMT trip yet though.

Sorcery is very much an active force you tune into with yoga, and mantra, and perhaps some drugs. I prefer the sober dreaming version though.

it is frustrating to attempt to bring anything truly noteworthy to their attention. at least the turd chunkers know they are throwin dirt on something real.. though they are obligated to obfuscate it. worse are those who genuinely are holding to their imagination that they are somehow in a position of authority in citing their current limited beliefs as the ultimate truth.. their dogma as the highest thesis.. etc.

such a thankless task to attempt to bring real information to the public at large. i am currently placing my hope in organizing a small group of humans. long story. the elites and their hyper intelligent minions already have done more for themselves than the public midwits will ever do for themselves.. even given similar opportunity and resources.

The image is a page from a book or a magazine, likely from the 19th century, as indicated by the text and the style of the writing. The page is titled "Swing" and is numbered "53." The content of the page is a text excerpt discussing the evolution of alphabets and the Greek alphabet.

The text discusses the evolution of alphabets and the Greek alphabet, mentioning that in prehistoric times, each stood on its own horizon, grounded by earth, breathing in heavens, seeing spheres of the sky, and being ruled by the gods. The text then goes on to describe how the ancient Greek mind set was re-invented by the Roman mind, which was more focused on the external world and the senses.

The text also mentions that when the eye saw a picture, it was not the picture that was seen, but the image of the picture. It explains that the ancient Greeks had no need to invent their prehistoric view when they saw a picture, as the image was already there. The text then discusses the need for the mind to be re-invented when the ancient Greeks had the ability to see one-to-one.

The image is a scanned page from a book or magazine, and the quality of the image is not very clear, with some text appearing to be cut off or blurred. The page is numbered "53," which suggests that this is a part of a larger document or book.

If you're looking for a completely materialistic explanation, I think it would be possible to put almost microscopic stencils in a laser so it actually is text, and a drug could change your perception so you notice it.

My point is that it is effectively computer code written on the back of the quantum fields of the natural reality. It's not the natural terrain itself. It's a technology that has been deployed regionally. Seeing it is not significantly different from perceiving their vehicles in the sky or any of the other devices and platforms that are distributed in the world just beyond our photonic light bandwidth of common perception.

You can find other aspects of the technology of the beings from the stars, but nearly all of them are similarly just beyond your ordinary perception.

You can break the functions of your conscience awareness that they are exploiting to keep you from perceiving their presence directly.

It's a bit overwhelming to be honest, but if you are the kind of person who would bet their life in order to gain knowledge it's well worth the effort

You either have to figure it out for yourself or have someone walk you through the process. Either way the process is entirely your own direct personal experience. Look at how difficult it is to share even this little detail with those who have not seen it for themselves.. you can easily become burdened with far more perception that the other humans are not prepared to be made aware of

To 'activate' their functionality you have only to explore your own mind.

People who attempt to communicate with a conscious awareness greater than their own are dipping into the presence of this field effect technology.

A non falsifiable conceptual narrative(religion) has been fabricated to confuse you if you're vulnerable to following the guidance of others who have even less of a clue than you started with.

What exactly is "the great spirit"?

What exactly would it look like to encounter technology that is literally millions of years older than our current human society?

Just a FYI you don't need a laser. You can see it if you take extreme doses of LSD. I took 2000-2500ug of LSD and after 12+ hours of intense tripping, while I was just starting to come down my visual field expanded and I could see "in-between" everything. I was sitting in my chair and looked down at the grain of the fabric and could see an infinite void between the stitching with walls of the "code" the whole way down. It's the same premise he has with the laser and low dose psychs. You just don't have to game the system. That being said that dosage of any psychedelic can fuck your psyche up for a year+ so don't chase the dose if you can't handle the repercussions.

The Disclosure of the CARET program at PACL

Print Friendly, PDF & Email

Let's look at the disclosure of element of the CARET program at PACL. It is actually a very informative disclosure, and as such it was denounced as a hoax by the NSA and related MAJestic support organizations. However, the reader should not be confused. This is a valid disclosure, and as such, it is useful to "smoke out" which UFO and investigative organizations have been compromised by the USA government.

I cover this disclosure exactly as it was presented. Today, of course it is pretty difficult to find the actual disclosure, at least in the United States. I also present some commentary and related information that is spawned off this disclosure.

Introduction

"We are just an advanced breed of monkeys on a minor planet of a very average star. But we can understand the Universe. That makes us something very special."

— Stephen Hawking

This is the entire text of the "C.A.R.E.T. disclosure". I place it here in complete verbatim as was provided on the Internet. This disclosure is perhaps the most authentic extraterrestrial disclosure made public in the five decades of secrecy. (Aside from MJ-12)

While it is well known that major UFO and debunking organizations have derided this disclosure as a fraud, I happen to know that it is not a fraud at all. Instead it is a valid disclosure of a small part of one of the myriad of extraterrestrial reverse engineering efforts of the 1980's.

C.A.R.E.T. is a VALID and ACTUAL disclosure of (associative) MAJestic documentation.

The disclosure contains an explanation, with selected pages from three separate reports; [1] A Research Report, [2] An Inventory Review, and [3] a Linguistic Primer. Also included were some actual photographs. Additionally some Q&A dialog occurred prior to the disclosure source going “x-ray” (silent).

This disclosure is not a fraud, fake or hoax. It is a real and valid actual disclosure. The reader should read the section concerning the United States disinformation efforts to fully appreciate the magnitude of the disclosure. If the reader chooses to believe that, it was just an elaborate hoax, fine. But it isn't, and I am the “real deal”, so I tell the reader that if you believe me, then you must also believe the validity of C.A.R.E.T.. Alternatively, if you do not believe me, then you can't possibly believe the C.A.R.E.T. disclosure.

“It is my view that most people dismissed the (C.A.R.E.T.) phenomena without bothering to look at the weight of evidence and testimony in it's entirety and instead allowed forum debunkers and pseudosceptics to decide the evidence for them. Don't let anyone live in your head rent free – as the saying goes.”

-will galison May 1, 2014 at 11:37 am

The US government has devoted a lot of time and money and resources to denounce this disclosure as a hoax. In fact the NSA has even set up numerous denouncement websites and organizations. Obviously someone is deeply offended. Look at all the time and effort that was put into this. Someone obviously had [1] a lot of money, and [2] a lot of time on their hands. There was a lot of effort to debunk this “hoax”. Why? Here is just one of the many websites;

http://www.dronehoax.com/drone\_history/isaac\_additional/caret.htm .

I ask the reader this; how many hours do you think went into writing all these articles (on this website)? How much time and money went into the design (of the website). Is this website a simple hobby site written by a concerned blogger? All of this is for a mere sighting and the release of a mere handful of pages? Look at the effort behind this. Do you, dear reader, have the time and energy (after work) to do the same concerning an article that you read about. This is an obvious; absolutely OBVIOUS example of NSA redirection and suppression.

(Working people, with families, and a life outside of work do not have the time to devote to pages and pages of website generate denouncements. Pulling one or two hours a night was a really difficult thing to do. But these websites sprung up within weeks of the disclosures. All of which is highly suggestive that time, money and effort were purposefully devoted to this effort. Just what kind of person devotes such time to a mere hoax?)

The following is the actual disclosure. I am presenting it exactly as it was released. However, certain foot notes and minor editing corrects might be present for the purposes of understandability. Header and address information is provided in a different font for readability purposes.

Explanation of the Recent "Strange Craft" Sightings

by "Isaac" from CoastToCoastAM Website

Greetings Coast to Coast AM,

I have information that can explain a great deal of what is going on in the photos provided by Chad, Rajman, the Lake Tahoe witness, as well as the photos taken by Jenna and Ty in Big Basin, CA...

I'm going by the alias "Isaac" while I release this information. I'm an electrical engineer and computer scientist and used to work in a program called "CARET" that was concerned with research and development based on extra-terrestrial technology. Many key elements of the technology I worked with during my time with CARET are clearly visible in these crafts. This work was done in the 80's in Palo Alto, CA, so it's no surprise to me that these sightings are taking place within such proximity to that area.

Attached to this email you will find numerous scans of photographs and documents from my CARET days that pertain to what I'm going to tell you, and would like to share with your audience. In addition, I have put up a small website that has very high resolution copies of all of these scans, as well as a lengthy letter that explains a lot about me, the CARET program, and these sightings. I've been listening to your show since 2002 and would like to work with you to get this information out there. Please read the text at the website for the rest of the details, as I am taking a fairly significant personal risk and would like to make sure it's worth it: isaaccaret.fortunecity.com

All I ask in sharing this information is that it's kept together. There are 4 photos and a total of 15 pages of scanned documents. If you'd like to resize them for your website, that is fine... I want people to have easy access to this information IN FULL. I feel this is reasonable and it is all I ask. I am NOT trying to sell anything and the only reason I created this very simple website is to ensure all the information is presented correctly and in one place.

--Isaac

Isaac and his photographs from CARET

The mysterious photographs of the materializing drone as photographed by "Chad" as placed on the Internet resulted in the C.A.R.E.T. disclosure by Isaac. The former middle manager released to the public a limited series of documents that helped to explain the craft that caused such consternation on the Internet.

My Experience with the CARET Program and Extra-terrestrial Technology by "Isaac" June 2007 from IsaacCaret Website

This letter is part of a package I've assembled for Coast to Coast AM to distribute to its audience. It is a companion to numerous document and photo scans and should not be separated from them.

You can call me Isaac, an alias I've chosen as a simple measure of protection while I release what would be called tremendously sensitive information even by today's standards. "Sensitive" is not necessarily synonymous with "dangerous", though, which is why my conscience is clear as I offer this material up for the public.

My government has its reasons for its continual secrecy, and I sympathize with many of them, but the truth is that I'm getting old and I'm not interested in meeting my maker one day with any more baggage than necessary! Furthermore, I put a little more faith in humanity than my former bosses do, and I think that a release of at least some of this info could help a lot more than it could hurt, especially in today's world.

I should be clear before I begin, as a final note: I am not interested in making myself vulnerable to the consequences of betraying the trust of my superiors and will not divulge any personal information that could determine my identity. However my intent is not to deceive, so information that I think is too risky to share will be simply left out rather than obfuscated in some way (aside from my alias, which I freely admit is not my real name).

I would estimate that with the information contained in this letter, I could be narrowed down to one of maybe 30-50 people at best, so I feel reasonably secure.

Some Explanation for the Recent Sightings

For many years I've occasionally considered the release of at least some of the material I possess, but the recent wave of photos and sightings has prompted me to cut to the chase and do so now.

I should first be clear that I'm not directly familiar with any of the crafts seen in the photos in their entirety. I've never seen them in a hangar or worked on them myself or seen aliens zipping around in them.

However, I have worked with and seen many of the parts visible in these crafts, some of which can be seen in the Q3-85 Inventory Review scan found at the top of this page. More importantly though, I'm very familiar with the "language" on their undersides seen clearly in photos by Chad and Rajman, and in another form in the Big Basin photos.

One question I can answer for sure is why they're suddenly here. These crafts have probably existed in their current form for decades, and I can say for sure that the technology behind them has existed for decades before that. The "language", in fact, (I'll explain shortly why I keep putting that in quotes) was the subject of my work in years past. I'll cover that as well.

The reason they're suddenly visible, however, is another matter entirely. These crafts, assuming they're anything like the hardware I worked with in the 80's (assuming they're better, in fact), are equipped with technology that enables invisibility.

That ability can be controlled both on board the craft, and remotely. However, what's important in this case is that this invisibility can also be disrupted by other technology. Think of it like radar jamming. I would bet my life savings (since I know this has happened before) that these craft are becoming visible and then returning to invisibility arbitrarily, probably unintentionally, and undoubtedly for only short periods, due to the activity of a kind of disrupting technology being set off elsewhere, but nearby.

I'm especially sure of this in the case of the Big Basin sightings, where the witnesses themselves reported seeing the craft just appear and disappear. This is especially likely because of the way the witness described one of the appearances being only a momentary flicker, which is consistent with the unintentional, intermittent triggering of such a device.

It's no surprise that these sightings are all taking place in California, and especially the Saratoga/South Bay area. Not far from Saratoga is Mountain View/Sunnyvale, home to Moffett Field and the NASA Ames Research center. Again, I'd be willing to bet just about anything that the device capable of hijacking the cloaking of these nearby craft was inadvertently triggered, probably during some kind of experiment, at the exact moment they were being seen. Miles away, in Big Basin, the witnesses were in the right place at the right time and saw the results of this disruption with their own eyes.

God knows what else was suddenly appearing in the skies at that moment, and who else may have seen it.

I've had some direct contact with this device, or at least a device capable of the same thing, and this kind of mistake is not unprecedented. I am personally aware of at least one other incident in which this kind of technology was accidentally set off, resulting in the sudden visibility of normally invisible things. The only difference is that these days, cameras are a lot more common!

The technology itself isn't ours, or at least it wasn't in the 80's.

Much like the technology in these crafts themselves, the device capable of remotely hijacking a vehicle's clacking comes from a non-human source too. Why we were given this technology has never been clear to me, but it's responsible for a lot. Our having access to this kind of device, along with our occasionally haphazard experimentation on them, has led to everything from cloaking malfunctions like this to full-blown crashes.

I can assure you that most (and in my opinion all) incidents of UFO crashes or that kind of thing had more to do with our meddling with extremely powerful technology at an inopportune time than it did mechanical failure on their part.

Trust me, those things don't fail unless something even more powerful than them makes them fail (intentionally or not). Think of it like a stray bullet. You can be hit by one at any time, without warning, and even the shooter didn't intend to hit you. I can assure you heads are rolling over this as well. If anyone notices a brilliant but sloppy physicist patrolling the streets of Baghdad in the next couple weeks, I'd be willing to guess how he got there. (I kid, of course, as I certainly hope that hasn't actually happened in this case)

I'd now like to explain how it is that I know this.

The CARET Program

My story begins the same as it did for many of my coworkers, with graduate and post-graduate work at university in electrical engineering.

And I had always been interested in computer science, which was a very new field at the time, and my interest piqued with my first exposure to a Tixo during grad school. In the years following school I took a scenic route through the tech industry and worked for the kinds of companies you would expect, until I was offered a job at the Department of Defense and things took a very different turn.

The TX-0, for Transistorized Experimental computer zero, but affectionately referred to as tixo (pronounced “tix oh”), was an early fully transistorized computer and contained a then-huge 64K of 18-bit words of magnetic core memory. The TX-0 was built in 1955 and went online in 1956 and was used continually through the 1960s at MIT.

My time at the DoD was mostly uneventful but I was there for quite a while. I apparently proved myself to be reasonably intelligent and loyal. By 1984 these qualities along with my technical background made me a likely candidate for a new program they were recruiting for called “CARET”.

Before I explain what CARET was I should back up a little. By 1984, Silicon Valley had been a juggernaut of technology for decades. In the less than 40 years since the appearance of Shockley’s transistor this part of the world had already produced a multi billion dollar computer industry and made technological strides that were unprecedented in other fields, from hypertext and online collaboration in '68 to the Alto in '73.

Private industry in Silicon Valley was responsible for some of the most incredible technological leaps in history and this fact did not go unnoticed by the US government and military. I don’t claim to have any special knowledge about Roswell or any of the other alleged early UFO events, but I do know that whatever the exact origin, the military was hard at work trying to understand and use the extra-terrestrial artifacts it had in its possession. While there had been a great deal of progress overall, things were not moving as quickly as some would have liked.

So, in 1984, the CARET program was created with the aim of harnessing the abilities of private industry in silicon valley and applying it to the ongoing task of understanding extra-terrestrial technology.

One of the best examples of the power of the tech sector was Xerox PARC, a research center in Palo Alto, CA. XPARC was responsible for some of the major milestones in the history of computing. While I never had the privilege of working there myself I did know many of the people who did and I can say that they were among the brightest engineers I ever knew.

PARC (Palo Alto Research Center Incorporated), formerly Xerox PARC, is a research and development company in Palo Alto, California, with a distinguished reputation for its contributions to information technology and hardware systems. Founded in 1970 as a division of Xerox Corporation, PARC has been in large part responsible for such developments as laser printing, Ethernet, the modern personal computer, graphical user interface (GUI) and desktop paradigm, object-oriented programming, ubiquitous computing, amorphous silicon (a-Si) applications, and advancing very-large-scale integration (VLSI) for semiconductors.

XPARC served as one of the models for the CARET program's first incarnation, a facility called the Palo Alto CARET Laboratory (PACL, lovingly pronounced "packle" during my time there). This was where I worked, along with numerous other civilians, under the auspices of military brass who were eager to find out how the tech sector made so much progress so quickly.

My time at the DoD was a major factor behind why I was chosen, and in fact about 30+ others who were hired around the same time had also been at the Department about as long, but this was not the case for everyone. A couple of my co-workers were plucked right from places like IBM and, at least two of them came from XPARC itself. My DoD experience did make me more eligible for positions of management, however, which is how I have so much of this material in my possession to begin with.

So in other words, civilians like myself who had at - at most - some decent experience working for the DoD but no actual military training or involvement, were suddenly finding ourselves in the same room as highly classified extra-terrestrial technology.

Of course they spent about 2 months briefing us all before we saw or did anything, and did their best to convince us that if we ever leaked a single detail about what we were being told, they'd do everything short of digging up our ancestors and putting a few slugs in them too just for good measure.

It seemed like there was an armed guard in every corner of every room. I'd worked under some pretty hefty NDAs in my time but this was so far out of my depth I didn't think I was going to last 2 weeks in an environment like that. But amazingly things got off to a good start. They wanted us, plain and simple, and our industry had shown itself to be so good at what it did that they were just about ready to give us carte blanche. Non Disclosure Agreement. A non-disclosure agreement (NDA), also known as a confidentiality agreement (CA), confidential disclosure agreement (CDA), proprietary information agreement (PIA), or secrecy agreement (SA), is a legal contract between at least two parties that outlines confidential material, knowledge, or information that the parties wish to share with one another for certain purposes, but wish to restrict access to or by third parties. It is a contract through which the parties agree not to disclose information covered by the agreement. An NDA creates a confidential relationship between the parties to protect any type of confidential and proprietary information or trade secrets. As such, an NDA protects non-public business information.

Of course, nothing with the military is ever that simple, and as is often the case they wanted to have their cake and eat it too. What I mean by this is that despite their interest in picking our brains and learning whatever they could from our way of doing things, they still wanted to do it their way often enough to frustrate us.

At this point I'm going to gloss over the emotional side of this experience, because this letter isn't intended to be a memoir, but I will say that there's almost no way to describe the impact this kind of revelation has on your mind. There are very few moments in life in which your entire world view is turned forever upside down, but this was one of them. I still remember that turning point during the briefing when I realized what he'd just told us, and that I hadn't heard him wrong, and that it wasn't some kind of joke.

In retrospect the whole thing feels like it was in slow motion, from that slight pause he took just before the term “extra-terrestrial” came out for the first time, to the way the room itself seemed to go off kilter as we collectively tried to grasp what was being said.

My reflex kept jumping back and forth between trying to look at the speaker, to understand him better, and looking at everyone else around me, to make sure I wasn't the only one that was hearing this. At the risk of sounding melodramatic, it's a lot like a child learning his parents are divorcing. I never experienced that myself, but a very close friend of mine did when we were boys, and he confided in me a great deal about what the experience felt like.

A lot of what he said would aptly describe what I was feeling in that room.

Here was a trusted authority figure telling you something that you just don't feel ready for, and putting a burden on your mind that you don't necessarily want to carry. The moment that first word comes out, all you can think about it is what it was like only seconds ago, and knowing that life is never going to be as simple as it was then. After all that time at the DoD, I thought I at least had some idea of what was going on in the world, but I'd never heard so much as a peep about this. Maybe one day I'll write more on this aspect, because it's the kind of thing I really would like to get off my chest, but for now I'll digress.

Unlike traditional research in this area, we weren't working on new toys for the air force.

For numerous reasons, the CARET people decided to aim its efforts at commercial applications rather than military ones. They basically wanted us to turn these artifacts into something they could patent and sell. One of CARET's most appealing promises was the revenue generated by these product-ready technologies, which could be funneled right back into black projects.

Working with a commercial application in mind was also yet another way to keep us in a familiar mind state. Developing technology for the military is very different than doing so for the commercial sector, and not having to worry about the difference was another way that CARET was very much like private industry.

CARET shined in the way it let us work the way we were used to working. They wanted to recreate as much of the environment we were used to as they could without compromising issues like security. That meant we got free reign to set up our own workflow, internal management structure, style manuals, documentation, and the like. They wanted this to look and feel like private industry, not the military. They knew that was how to get the best work out of us, and they were right.

But things didn't go as smoothly when it came to matters like access to classified information.

They were exposing what is probably their single biggest secret to a group of people who had never even been through basic training and it was obvious that the gravity of this decision was never far from their minds. We started the program with a small set of extra-terrestrial artifacts along with fairly elaborate briefings on each as well as access to a modest amount of what research had already been completed.

It wasn't long before we realized we needed more though, and getting them to provide even the smallest amount of new material was like pulling teeth. CARET stood for "Commercial Applications Research for Extra-terrestrial Technology", but we often joked that it should have stood for "Civilians Are Rarely Ever Trusted."

PACL was located in Palo Alto, but unlike XPARC, it wasn't at the end of a long road in the middle of a big complex surrounded by rolling hills and trees. PACL was hidden in an office complex owned entirely by the military but made to look like an unassuming tech company. From the street, all you could see was what appeared to be a normal parking lot with a gate and a guard booth, and a 1-story building inside with a fictitious name and logo.

What wasn't visible from the street was that behind the very first set of doors was enough armed guards to invade Poland, and 5 additional underground stories. They wanted to be as close as possible to the kinds of people they were looking to hire and be able to bring them in with a minimum of fuss.

Inside, we had everything we needed. State of the art hardware and a staff of over 200 computer scientists, electrical engineers, mechanical engineers, physicists and mathematicians. Most of us were civilians, as I've said, but some were military, and a few of them had been working on this technology already.

Of course, you were never far from the barrel of a machine gun, even inside the labs themselves (something many of us never got used to), and bi-weekly tours were made by military brass to ensure that not a single detail was out of line. Most of us underwent extensive searches on our way into and out of the building. There it was, probably the biggest secret in the world, in a bunch of parts spread out on laboratory tables in the middle of Palo Alto so you can imagine their concern.

One downside to CARET was that it wasn't as well-connected as other operations undoubtedly were. I never got to see any actual extra-terrestrials (not even photos), and in fact never even saw one of their compete vehicles. 99% of what I saw was related to the work at hand, all of which was conducted within a very narrow context on individual artifacts only. The remaining 1% came from people I met through the program, many of which working more closely with "the good stuff" or had in the past.

In fact, what was especially amusing about the whole affair was the way that our military management almost tried to act as if the technology we were essentially reengineering wasn't extra-terrestrial at all. Aside from the word "extra-terrestrial" itself, we rarely heard any other terms like "alien" or "UFO" or "outer space" or anything.

Those aspects were only mentioned briefly when absolutely necessary to explain something. In many cases it was necessary to differentiate between the different races and their respective technology, and they didn't even use the word "races".

They were referred to simply as different “sources”.

The Technology

A lot of the technology we worked on was what you would expect, namely antigravity.

Most of the researchers on the staff with backgrounds in propulsion and rocketry were military men, but the technology we were dealing with was so out of this world that it didn't really matter all that much what your background was because none of it applied.

All we could hope to do was use the vocabulary of our respective fields as a way to model the extremely bizarre new concepts we were very slowly beginning to understand as best we could. A rocket engineer doesn't usually rub elbows much with a computer scientist, but inside PACL, we were all equally mystified and were ready to entertain any and all ideas.

The physicists made the most headway initially because out of all of our skills, theirs overlapped the most with the concepts behind this technology (although that isn't saying much!)

Once they got the ball rolling though, we began to find that many of the concepts found in computer science were applicable as well, albeit in very vague ways. While I didn't do a lot of work with the antigravity hardware myself, I was occasionally involved in the assessment of how that technology was meant to interface with its user.

The antigravity was amazing, of course, as were the advances we were making with materials engineering and so on. But what interested me most then, and still amazes me most to this day, was something completely unrelated.

In fact, it was this technology that immediately jumped out at me when I saw the Chad and Rajman photos, and even more so in the Big Basin photos.

The “Language”

I put the word Language in quotes because calling what I am about to describe a “language” is a misnomer, although it is an easy mistake to make.

Their hardware wasn't operated in quite the same way as ours. In our technology, even today, we have a combination of hardware and software running almost everything on the planet. Software is more abstract than hardware, but ultimately it needs hardware to run it.

In other words, there's no way to write a computer program on a piece of paper, set that piece of paper on a table or something, and expect it to actually do something. The most powerful code in the world still doesn't actually do anything until a piece of hardware interprets it and translates its commands into actions.

But their technology is different. It really did operate like the magical piece of paper sitting on a table, in a manner of speaking. They had something akin to a language, that could quite literally execute itself, at least in the presence of a very specific type of field.

The language, a term I am still using very loosely, is a system of symbols (which does admittedly very much resemble a written language) along with geometric forms and patterns that fit together to form diagrams that are themselves functional.

Once they are drawn, so to speak, on a suitable surface made of a suitable material and in the presence of a certain type of field, they immediately begin performing the desired tasks.

It really did seem like magic to us, even after we began to understand the principles behind it.

I worked with these symbols more than anything during my time at PACL, and recognized them the moment I saw them in the photos. They appear in a very simple form on Chad's craft, but appear in the more complex diagram form on the underside of the Big Basin craft as well.

Both are unmistakable, even at the small size of the Big Basin photos. An example of a diagram in the style of the Big Basin craft is included with this in a series of scanned pages from the [mis-titled] "Linguistic Analysis Primer". We needed a copy of that diagram to be utterly precise, and it took about a month for a team of six to copy that diagram into our drafting program!

Explaining everything I learned about this technology would fill up several volumes, but I will do my best to explain at least some of the concepts as long as I am taking the time to write all this down.

First of all, you wouldn't open up their hardware to find a CPU here, and a data bus there, and some kind of memory over there. Their hardware appeared to be perfectly solid and consistent in terms of material from one side to the other. Like a rock or a hunk of metal.

But upon [much] closer inspection, we began to learn that it was actually one big holographic computational substrate - each "computational element" (essentially individual particles) can function independently, but are designed to function together in tremendously large clusters. I say its holographic because you can divide it up into the smallest chunks you want and still find a scaled-down but complete representation of the whole system.

They produce a nonlinear computational output when grouped. So 4 elements working together is actually more than 4 times more powerful than 1.

Most of the internal "matter" in their crafts (usually everything but the outermost housing) is actually this substrate and can contribute to computation at any time and in any state. The shape of these "chunks" of substrate also had a profound effect on its functionality, and often served as a "shortcut" to achieve a goal that might otherwise be more complex.

So back to the language.

The language is actually a "functional blueprint". The forms of the shapes, symbols and arrangements thereof is itself functional. What makes it all especially difficult to grasp is that every element of each "diagram" is dependent on and related to every other element, which means no single detail can be created, removed or modified independently.

Humans like written language because each element of the language can be understood on its own, and from this, complex expressions can be built. However, their "language" is entirely context-sensitive, which means that a given symbol could mean as little as a 1-bit flag in one context, or, quite literally, contain the entire human genome or a galaxy star map in another.

The ability for a single, small symbol to contain, not just represent, tremendous amounts of data is another counter-intuitive aspect of this concept. We quickly realized that even working in groups of 10 or more on the simplest of diagrams, we found it virtually impossible to get anything done. As each new feature was added, the complexity of the diagram exponentially grew to unmanageable proportions.

For this reason we began to develop computer-based systems to manage these details and achieved some success, although again we found that a threshold was quickly reached beyond which even the supercomputers of the day were unable to keep up.

Word was that the extra-terrestrials could design these diagrams as quickly and easily as a human programmer could write a Fortran program. It's humbling to think that even a network of supercomputers wasn't able to duplicate what they could do in their own heads. Our entire system of language is based on the idea of assigning meaning to symbols.

Their technology, however, somehow merges the symbol and the meaning, so a subjective audience is not needed. You can put whatever meaning you want on the symbols, but their behavior and functionality will not change, any more than a transistor will function differently if you give it another name.

Here's an example of how complex the process is. Imagine I ask you to incrementally add random words to a list such that no two words use any of the same letters, and you must perform this exercise entirely in your head, so you can't rely on a computer or even a pen and paper. If the first in the list was, say, "fox", the second item excludes all words with the letters F, O and X. If the next word you choose is "tree", then the third word in the list can't have the letters F, O, X, T, R, or E in it.

As you can imagine, coming up with even a third word might start to get just a bit tricky, especially since you can't easily visualize the excluded letters by writing down the words.

By the time you get to the fourth, fifth and sixth words, the problem has spiraled out of control. Now imagine trying to add the billionth word to the list (imagine also that we're working with an infinite alphabet so you don't run out of letters) and you can imagine how difficult it is for even a computer to keep up. Needless to say, writing this kind of thing "by hand" is orders of magnitude beyond the capabilities of the brain.

My background lent itself well to this kind of work though. I'd spent years writing code and designing both analog and digital circuits, a process that at least visually resembled these diagrams in some way. I also had a personal affinity for combinatorics, which served me well as I helped with the design of software running on supercomputers that could juggle the often trillions of rules necessary to create a valid diagram of any reasonable complexity.

This overlapped quite a bit with compiler theory as well, a subject I always found fascinating, and in particular compiler optimization, a field that wasn't half of what it is today back then. A running joke among the linguistics team was that Big-O notation couldn't adequately describe the scale of the task, so we'd substitute other words for "big". By the time I left I remember the consensus was "Astronomical-O" finally did it justice.

Like I said, I could go on for hours about this subject, and would love to write at least an introductory book on the subject if it wasn't still completely classified, but that's not the point of this letter so I'll try to get back on track.

The last thing I'd like to discuss is how I got copies of this material, what else I have in my possession, and what I plan to do with it in the future.

My Collection

I worked at PACL from 1984 to 1987, by which time I was utterly burned out.

The sheer volume of details to keep in mind while working with the diagrams was enough to challenge anyone's sanity, and I was really at the end of my rope with the military's attitude towards our "need to know". Our ability to get work done was constantly hampered by their reluctance to provide us with the necessary information, and I was tired of bureaucracy getting in the way of research and development. I left somewhere in the middle of a 3-month bell curve in which about a quarter of the entire PACL staff left for similar reasons.

I was also starting to disagree with the direction the leadership wanted to take as far as the subject of extra-terrestrials went. I always felt that at least some form of disclosure would be beneficial, but as a lowly CARET engineer I wasn't exactly in the position to call shots.

The truth is, our management didn't even want us discussing non-technical aspects of this subject (such as ethical or philosophical issues), even among ourselves, as they felt it was enough of a breach of security to let civilians like us anywhere near this kind of thing in the first place.

So, about 3 months before I resigned (which was about 8 months before I was really out, since you don't just walk out of a job like that with a 2 week notice). I decided to start taking advantage of my position. As I mentioned earlier, my DOD experience got me into an internal management role sooner than some of my colleagues, and after about a year of that kind of status, the outgoing searches each night became slightly less rigorous.

Normally, we were to empty out any containers, bags or briefcases, then remove our shirt and shoes and submit to a kind of frisking. Work was never allowed to go home with you, no matter who you were. For me, though, the briefcase search was eventually enough.

Even before I actually decided to do it, I was sure that I would be able to sneak certain materials out with me. I wanted to do this because I knew the day would come when I would want to write something like this, and I knew I'd regret it until the day I died if I didn't at least leave the possibility open to do so. So I started photocopying documents and reports by the dozen. I'd then put the papers under my shirt around my lower back, tucked enough into my belt to ensure they wouldn't fall out.

I could do this in any one of a few short, windowless hallways on some of the lower floors, which were among the few places that didn't have an armed guard watching my every move. I'd walk in one end with a stack of papers large enough that when I came out the other end with some of them in my shirt, there wouldn't be a visible difference in what I was holding.

You absolutely cannot be too careful if you're going to pull a stunt like this. As long as I walked carefully they wouldn't make a crinkling noise. In fact, the more papers I took, the less noise they made, since they weren't as flimsy that way. I'd often take upwards of 10-20 pages at once. By the time I was done, I'd made out with hundreds of photocopies, as well as a few originals and a large collection of original photographs.

With this initial letter I have attached high resolution scans of the following:

A page from an inventory review with a photo that appears to depict one of the parts found in the Rajman sighting and parts very similar to the Big Basin craft

The first 9 pages of one of our quarterly research reports

Scans of the original photographs used in that report, since the photocopies obscure most of the details

5 pages from a report on our ongoing analysis of the "language" (inappropriately titled "linguistic analysis"), depicting the kind of diagram just barely visible on the underside of the Big Basin craft

This material is the most relevant and explanatory I could find on short notice.

Now that these are up, If I decide to release more in the future, I'll be able to take my time and better search this rather large collection of mine that I've sadly never organized.

I'm not sure what I'll be doing with the rest of the collection in the future. I suppose I'll wait and see how this all plays out, and then play it by ear. There are certainly risks involved in what I'm doing, and if I were to actually be identified and caught, there could be rather serious consequences. However, I've taken the proper steps to ensure a reasonable level of anonymity and am quite secure in the fact that the information I've so far provided is by no means unique among many of the CARET participants.

Besides, part of me has always suspected that the government relies on the occasional leak like this, and actually wants them to happen, because it contributes to a steady, slow-paced path towards revealing the truth of this matter.

Since Leaving CARET

Like I said, I left PACL (Palo Alto CARET Laboratory) in '87, but have kept in touch with a great many of my friends and coworkers from those days. Most of us are retired by now, except of course for those of us that went on to get teaching jobs, but a few of us still hear things through the grapevine.

As for CARET itself, I'm not sure what's become of it. Whether it's still known by the same name, I'm quite sure it's still active in some capacity, although who knows where. I heard from a number of people that PACL closed up shop a few years after I left, but I've still yet to get a clear answer on why exactly that happened.

But I'm sure the kind of work we did there is still going strong. I've heard from a lot of friends that there are multiple sites like PACL in Sunnyvale and Mountain View, also disguised to look like unremarkable office space. But this is all second-hand information so you can make of it what you will.

Around 2002 or so I came across Coast to Coast AM and have been hooked ever since. I admit, I don't take most of the show's content as anything more than entertainment, but there have been occasions when I could be sure a guest was clearly speaking from experience or a well-informed source. For me, there's just something very surreal about hearing all this speculation and so-called inside information about UFOs and the like, but being personally able to verify at least some of it as being true or false.

It's also a nightly reminder of how hectic things were in those days, which helps me enjoy my retirement all the more. Knowing I'm not part of that crazy world anymore really is something I enjoy on a daily basis, as much as I miss some of it.

Conclusion

What I've shared so far is only a very small portion of what I have, and what I know.

Despite the very sheltered and insulated atmosphere within CARET, I did ultimately learn a great deal from various colleagues, and some of what I learned is truly incredible. I'd also like to say that for what it's worth, during my time there I never heard anything about invasions, or abductions, or many of the more frightening topics that often pop up on Coast to Coast AM.

That's not to say that none of it is true, but in my time working alongside some of the most well-connected people in this field, it never came up. So at the very least I can say my intent is not to scare anyone. My view on the extra-terrestrial situation is very much a positive, albeit still highly secretive one.

One thing I can definitely say is that if they wanted us gone, we would have been gone a very, very long time ago, and we wouldn't even have seen it coming. Throw out your ideas about a space war or anything silly like that. We'd be capable of fighting back against them about as much as ants could fight back against a stampede of buffalo.

But that's OK. We're the primitive race, they're the advanced races, and that's just the way it is. The other advanced races let them live through their primitive years back in their day, and there's no reason to think it will be any different for us. They aren't in the market for a new planet, and even if they were, there are way too many planets out there for them to care about ours enough to take it by force.

To reiterate my take on the recent sightings, I'd guess that experimentation done in the last couple months on a device that, among other things, is capable of interfering with various crafts onboard invisibility has resulted in a sudden wave of sightings. It may not explain all of the recent events, but like I said, I'd bet my life that's exactly what happened at Big Basin at least, and it's probably related in some way to the Chad, Rajman and Tahoe sightings.

So, despite all the recent fanfare over this, I'd say this doesn't mean much. Most importantly, they aren't suddenly "here". They've been here for a long time, but just happened to turn unintentionally visible for brief periods recently.

Lastly, there are so many people selling books, and DVDs, and doing lectures, and all that, that I would like to reiterate the fact that I am not here to sell anything. The material I'm sharing is free to distribute provided it's all kept intact and unmodified, and this letter is included.

I tend to question the motives of anyone charging money for their information, and will assure you that I will never do such a thing. And in the future, just to cover all the bases, anyone claiming to be me who's selling a DVD or book is most certainly not going to be me.

Any future releases from me will come from the email address I've used to contact Coast to Coast AM, and will be sent to them only.

I'd like to make this clear as well to ensure that people can be sure that any future information comes from the same source, although I must be clear: at this time I do not have any future plans for additional information. Time will tell how long I will maintain this policy, but do not expect anything soon. I'd really like to let this information "settle" for a while and see how it goes.

If I find out I'm getting an IRS audit tomorrow, then maybe this wasn't too smart.

Until then, I'm going to take it slow. I hope this information has been helpful.

Isaac: "There are a few misconceptions that I have noticed so far and would like to clear them up, and will also answer your questions:

1) I realize now that I did not make this clear, but I should clarify that I am not responsible for the blacking out of the Q4-86 report. Most of the copies I was able to make came from documents that were already archived, which meant that they had already been censored for use by outside parties that needed access to some, but not all, of CARET's information. I'm trying to share this information, not hide it, but if I did feel that if a given topic was too sensitive for some reason, I would make it clear that I had personally covered it up and probably try to give a reason why.

2) I do not understand the question about why the diagram would be "formatted for 8.5 x 11"... As I mention in my letter, the diagram is a reproduction, not the original. We had a team of technical artists painstakingly copy the diagram from its original source, which was a slightly curved panel not unlike the one seen in the Big Basin craft, although this one was apparently inside the craft, not on the outside. We copied it into a drafting program over the course of about a month.

Our software was understandably primitive by today's standards, but it was still orders of magnitude more powerful than a pencil and paper would have been. This made a task that would have otherwise been nearly impossible relatively feasible, albeit extremely time-consuming. I can assure you, "they" did not make anything particularly convenient for us. One of the reasons we chose to reproduce that particular diagram was because out of all the diagram-artifacts we had access to, it was on the flattest surface.

Since the geometry of the forms is extremely important, curvature of the surface it's printed on must be "corrected" if it is to be reproduced in a surface with a different contour (such as a flat page). This can be done in a number of ways, by either using a mathematical model to reverse the effect of the surface curves on the diagram's shapes, or by methods of physical measuring that allow precise measuring of irregular surfaces. In either case, however, it adds a significant new dimension of labor to an already extremely labor-intensive task, so it's avoided whenever possible. We really just needed one or two accurately copied diagrams to serve as convenient examples for our own work in decoding and reproducing it, so luckily this was not something we had to do often. Some experimentation was being done on ways to "scan" the diagrams as well, using an almost completely automated process that could automatically account for curved surfaces, but during my time there, very little progress was made on this front.

3) I think the confusion over the quality of the documents stems from the fact that he (critic) is under the impression they (CARET document) were typeset. They were not. First of all, I'm no guru when it comes to graphics or design, but being in close contact with numerous people from places like XPARC will give you enough background to know the lay of the land. What's first important to note is that systems capable of desktop publishing had been in development for many years before CARET, mostly starting with the Xerox Alto (in 1973), which XPARC developed themselves.

In fact, I once remember hearing from someone related to the original Alto team that Boeing (I believe) used the Alto to lay out and print the documentation for one of their planes (or something to that effect, I heard the story years ago). The joke was apparently that there was so MUCH documentation that the plane itself could essentially be filled with the pages. Furthermore, laser printing itself had also been around for many years (albeit in an extremely expensive form), and was also developed within XPARC (more or less). Other systems, such as PERQ and Lilith, also came out around the late 70's and while none of them turned into major commercial products, they were not uncommon among large companies and [mostly] universities and were put to very productive use.

These systems were also the inspiration for the Apple Lisa and Macintosh, which was of course perhaps the biggest factor in the consumer-level desktop publishing boom of the late 80's and early 90's. By 1984, there were quite a few options available for producing these kinds of documents, they were just ABSURDLY expensive, so they weren't on every street corner. Obviously it was nowhere near as turnkey and simple as it is today, but it was a very crude approximation of the same process with similar tools. We just had far less features and everything was a hell of a lot slower. But the point I'm trying to make is that while our method of documentation was somewhat advanced for its time, and also somewhat uncommon, it was hardly unattainable by a sufficiently motivated, financed, and well-connected organization.

I had very little contact with the technical writers for the most part, but I do know that we were using this kind of technology for both page layout and printing. CARET was expected to produce a massive amount of detailed, well-formatted documentation that could be easily modified and re-used for numerous drafts and revisions, and we would not have been able to keep up using traditional page layout and typesetting techniques. The mid-1980's were a very transitional period for these fields, and I would suggest that people do not assume we were using run-of-the-mill standards.

One of the things I appreciated most about CARET was that if the technology was available, and we needed it to work better or more effectively, it was given to us with little debate. But typesetting and digital page layout are apples and oranges, so I think most of this is a moot point anyway.

The bottom line is that many people both inside and outside the engineering world frequently underestimate how long we've had a lot of the technology we have. 99% of the algorithms we use today were developed decades ago, they just didn't have the same practical applications immediately available. Most of the engineers of the 60's and 70's would have been right at home with today's developments and technologies. The only difference is that things have gotten smaller and faster. In the vast majority of technologies, that is the only thing that REALLY changes from one era to the next. If I told the average person that we had speech-synthesizing technology in 1936, they probably wouldn't believe me.

I could show you a prototype of a simple drafting/design system that was operated by a light pen directly on a screen from the 1960's. You could draw a shape freehand, then immediately rotate it, modify it, duplicate it, or whatever. You could draw lines connecting different objects, then erase them by simply drawing a squiggly line over it. The computer could interpret the squiggles as a sign to erase something, all in real time. And this was half a century ago, and decades before CARET. Think about that for a moment. The point is, most of what we have today is much older than we think. The only differences are that it's faster, cheaper, and a marketing team has given it a glossy finish and found a commercial application for it. But if you take away some of the speed, power, ubiquity and consumer appeal, you'll find a lot of today's technology scattered throughout much of the 20th century. I hope this is helpful.

To: earthfiles@earthfiles.com

Isaac: "1) While I wasn't a major player in the (CARET) organization, I was hardly 'some worker.' My middle-management position is the only reason I was able to make out with what I did. Bear in mind that even someone in my position would never get the chance to leave with even the smallest of actual artifacts, but paperwork smuggling was feasible for anyone who wasn't subjected to the frisking.

Also, let's not forget that paperwork only proves so much. I'll be the first to agree that everything I've provided could be faked, I suppose. It is, after all, just a series of images. While the powers that be obviously don't want this material leaking if they can help it, they're certainly aware that scans of documents aren't in the same league as UFOs landing on the White House lawn. I'm not the first person to leak a document or a photo, and I won't be the last. The information I've shared is very unlikely to change the world, and this is the reason I'm not worried about being literally murdered if I'm identified. I'll face consequences to be sure, but it's not the kind of thing they kill for.

2) Of course the manual doesn't look anything like typical government and military documents. The entire purpose of CARET was to recreate the look and feel of silicon valley private enterprise, populate it with private industry engineers, and let it tackle the problem of extraterrestrial technology research. Style manuals were among the numerous things we brought with us from the 'outside world.' I'm not sure what else can be said about this. I agree it's uncommon for non-standard documents to come out of this kind of research, but it's even more uncommon for people like myself (and even more so for many of my co-workers) to be brought into this kind of project in the first place. Most of us were decidedly not military men. I find it a lot more bizarre than the fact that we were able to design our reports a certain way. CARET was an exception to many of the usual rules.

3) If he (one of many critics who emailed Earthfiles and which I shared with Isaac) believes the pictures are fake, I certainly can't do or say anything to prove otherwise. He sounds very sure of himself.

4) Most importantly, be very wary of anyone who claims to 'know the mind' of extraterrestrials. The comments he's made are, to put it lightly, naive and extremely presumptuous. Firstly, he's referring to 'the aliens' as if there is a single collective group of them. The universe is not split into 'humans' and 'non-humans,' any more than Earth is split up into 'Spanish' and 'non-Spanish' or something equally arbitrary. There are numerous races - and again, like our own races of humans here on earth, they do things in very different ways.

His comment that 'the aliens don't do this or that' is akin to saying 'humans don't speak Japanese.' Well, many humans don't, but Japanese humans certainly do. The point is not that his statement is right or wrong, but simply that it's phrased illogically. He then goes on to suggest that the design of the drones is wasting space, which is again, alarming in its arrogance. We had some of the brightest minds in the world spending years just to understand a single facet of their technology, while this individual claims to be able to assess basically every detail of a given design after looking at a single photo and conclude that it's inefficient. I'm not even sure such a statement should be dignified with a response, and I'm sure you can understand why.

To be honest, whoever this person is, I wrote him off as soon as he said 'the aliens would never design as these pictures depict.' That's about as presumptuous (if not ignorant) as a statement on this subject can be, at least coming from a fellow human. Unless there's an alien engineer on the other side of this email, there's simply no way such statements could have merit. I'm really only writing this as a courtesy to you.

At best, he's been exposed to technology from a radically different race, and at worst, he doesn't know what he's talking about. This individual may have access to real information, and he might not. If he is a fellow 'whistle blower,' then I'm not interested in attacking him. If he's not, and is simply making things up, then I'm even less interested. Whatever he is or isn't is not for me to say, but judging by the way he talks about this issue I have my doubts.

It's a big world and these are complicated issues. A sense of humility and the admission we don't know everything is one of our greatest assets.

20JUL07 Update from Isaac
July 20, 2007

Update: Since posting this Earthfiles report, I have received several emails from professionals such as this one on July 28, 2007:

"I note that several readers have expressed reservations about Isaac's hard-copies of the research material on the basis of page layout and the sophistication of the word processing. Typically the claim runs along the lines of 'couldn't do that back then.' I find it interesting that some people claim such authority when clearly they do not really know.

The fact is this: The Xerox 860 was in wide use in the early to mid-80's as was the top-of-the-line dedicated Word Processor. It wasn't a PC or a general purpose computer though; all it did was WYSIWYG word pro (in fact pre-dating the WYSIWYG feature of the Mac which came a couple of years later). By today's standards it was huge, very expensive and was somewhat complicated to use. I was in the publishing business at the time and we sold newsletters to the accounting and legal profession. They were produced on the Xerox 860 by our dedicated '860 Operator' and resulted in very high quality documents that looked typeset. The layout could be 100% controlled including justification, although the fonts were mechanical font wheels that had to be swapped in and out. The printers were huge and very high-end in quality. (As a note: photocopiers were very high-end even then, although in the mid 80's were still electrostatic/toner based).

Given that CARET was 'next door' to XPARC I see nothing unusual in the quality or layout of the documents and any skepticism raised on that account should be declared completely invalid. Here is a link to a reference page re the X860:"

27JUL07 Update from Isaac

July 27, 2007 Albuquerque, New Mexico - After the Isaac letter and CARET document were released on June 26, 2007, one of the criticisms was expressed this way:

"Looking at the so-called 'documentation' that goes with this stuff, the text-formatting is obviously done with relatively recent vintage page-layout software. You can tell by the perfect nature of the block justification.

"That type of extremely precise (even in word-spacing), indeed perfect, text-formatting DID NOT EXIST IN 1985, particularly in a laboratory or even corporate environment. After looking at all of the fancy 'documents,' including the Macromedia Freehand or Adobe Illustrator-designed 'alien diagrams,' I state now and for the RECORD that this whole thing is a HOAX, and will be proven to be such."

Another critic wondered why the extraterrestrial diagrams were formatted for 8.5 x 11-sized paper? Other repeated criticism was that if Isaac really wanted the public to see some of the research facts behind the aerial "drones," why did he blacken some of the CARET document text?

One of many critics emailed these comments, which Isaac addressed in 2nd reply below:

"This is a big hoax. For one thing, the US Government would NEVER allow this information to left in the hands of some worker. Another thing, the manual does not look anything like a legal NASA or a government document either. The pictures of the 'artifact' are photo-shopped and I can tell you that the aliens DO not label every single part as pictured. The anti-grav unit pictured is fake. The photos of the drone on the floor are model parts. The configuration of all the drones sent in to you and others is something the aliens would never design as all these designs pictured show gross misuse of space. All their ships are based on the use of space. Not one inch to them is wasted and if you look at the history of 'probes' from EBE's they are SMALL and fast. I think you have been had. I am surprised that you and George Noory etc. are easily tricked by this. I would definitely check with your reliable contacts deep in the 'Know' and find out for yourself."

I emailed these issues to Isaac and on June 27, 2007, I received his replies in two separate emails indicated by receipt times, which Isaac gave me permission to share in an Earthfiles follow-up. My delay in reporting these emails is that I had an indication from Isaac that I might be able to interview him by phone. So, I waited, hoping the interview would occur. But to date, that has not happened.

Communication from Issac Ended after 27 July 2007

Isaac initiated his disclosure in June 2007. It created a firestorm of denunciation and ridicule. Suddenly at the end of July 2007, all communication stopped abruptly. All went silent after 4-5 weeks from the first disclosure.

Approximately 4 to 5 months later CGI versions of the CARET images made their debut. By the end of the year, a music video was released and heavily promoted by the mainstream media. This effort proceeded in parallel with a debunking effort by the NSA. Spelunking through the website archives one can easily see that the debunking websites all sprung up at about the same time (within weeks) and were very active through 2008 effectively trying to rewrite history and disparage the disclosure.

While Isaac was not in the same program that I was in, there is no doubt that he violated confidentiality restrictions that he had agreed to back in the 1980's. I am confident that he suffered the consequences for this disclosure. I lament his loss. We all should realize that if we have information we need to do what Edward Snowden did and provide a mechanism so that all of the information might be disseminated properly upon our demise.

Pages from the Q4-86 Research Report

Cover page Q4-86 Research Report

The report that was the primary subject matter of the "C.A.R.E.T. disclosure" was the December 1986 Q4-86 Research Report for the "Commercial Applications Research for Extraterrestrial Technology" (C.A.R.E.T.) from the PACL staff at the Palo Alto Caret Laboratory. This report was presented in a three-ring binder format. Note the author's name is censored out as well as the street address for the Palo Alto Caret Laboratory.

This is the first page of the fourth quarter report for the year 1986 of the Palo Alto CARET Laboratory. In it is a "executive summary" of the projects and an overview of the rest of the documentation. The goal of the research has been to "...achieve a greater understanding of extraterrestrial technology within the context of commercial applications and civilian use." It describes that what is commonly referred to reverse engineering of extraterrestrial technology which is known as "extraction". It delineates a specific goal with is an "extraction package" that can be used as a sort of building block by which other technologies might be built upon.

This is the third page of the December 1986 Q4-86 Research Report for the "Commercial Applications Research for Extraterrestrial Technology" (C.A.R.E.T.) from the PACL staff at the Palo Alto Caret Laboratory. It contains the executive summary of the contents in the report. "...virtually all aspects of most extraterrestrial craft seem to incorporate its use in some way."

This is page 4 of the December 1986 Q4-86 Research Report for the "Commercial Applications Research for Extraterrestrial Technology" (C.A.R.E.T.) from the PACL staff at the Palo Alto Caret Laboratory. "Additionally, PACL has been provided with a small device capable of controlling A1 by activating and deactivating it, as well as switching between its three primary modes of operation. This device, assigned the identification code S1, is of particularly sensitive importance, as it is the only known method of controlling A1."

This is page 6 of the December 1986 Q4-86 Research Report for the "Commercial Applications Research for Extraterrestrial Technology" (C.A.R.E.T.) from the PACL staff at the Palo Alto Caret Laboratory. "Research in the internal functionality of A1 began in late (1986) and as such, little is currently known. What is certain, however, is that the device contains no moving parts whatsoever, does not feature any kind of control interface in the form of buttons, switches, or levers, and, apparently, can only be manipulated by the technology contained in S1."

"While initial experimentation indicated that the artifacts were composed of a consistent solid material, experiments on A1's component mode suggest that the artifacts are more internally complex..." Page 7 from the Palo Alto CARET Laboratory 1986, fourth quarter research report.

Pages from the Q3-85 Inventory Review

Part of the disclosure featured segments from other documents as well. This is a page from the Q3-85 Inventory Review of the components being reverse engineered at PACL at CARET. I must remind the reader of the NSA efforts to downplay or disparage this disclosure. After all, they developed a complete MTV Video Music track and supportive CAD models to the public to “prove” that his release of information was nothing more than just a “publicity stunt”. I should hope that the reader knows otherwise. Look at the pictures above. Does this “isolated page out of a report” look like part of a “publicity stunt”? Do these objects look like CAD files placed upon a photographed background? Think people! Think!

This is page 119 from the Linguistics Primer by PACL for the CARET project. This page features figure 14.11 which is a full view of diagram D39-08-117c. This page has penned in notations made by one of the researchers. The researcher who made the notations was obviously European as they did not use conventional American notation for numbers. (The number seven and the number one are obviously written in the European style.)

Page 122 from the Linguistic Primer

This is page 122 of the Linguistic Primer by PACL for the CARET project. In it, figure 14.14 is described; “Compound junction in a dual-link union with heavy-state tri-switch and diffuser”. The reader should note that the tri-switch is unbalanced. The angles between each of the three “arms” do not equal 33.3333 degrees. In fact, the tri-switch is perhaps the most interesting object in this report.

The Photographs

CARET Photograph 1

The reader should note that at no time during the NSA rewriting of the C.A.R.E.T. narrative, did they provide a physical model of this device shown in the picture above. Nor did they provide the supposed CAD drawings that described it. Again, the debunking of this disclosure was “full-on”, loud, boisterous, but incomplete. There were serious omissions from the debunking efforts.

CARET photograph 2

If the entire C.A.R.E.T. disclosure was all a CGI publicity stunt, then where are the CGI models of the above item? Where are the actual physical models that this photo came from? Obviously they would have to provide the models, and the software files. But they didn't because it was too complex and too expensive to do. The belief that they could overwhelm the mass public with the disinformation effort was largely successful. Nothing is ever 100% successful, and MAJestic and the NSA realizes this. They strive for a mere 80% success effort. Their goal is to bury the disclosure from exposure to the vast bulk of the American population. They are not concerned with the handful of "true" believers, as they view them as largely impotent.

CARET photograph 3

This is a closeup of the two I-beams that are connected to the antigravity device.

CARET photograph 4

This is the fourth photograph that was part of the disclosure. Here we have another closeup view of the two I-beam structures that are part of the antigravity device.

CARET photograph 5

Here is the fifth photograph of the personal antigravity mechanism showing the two I-beam structures. Note that both I-beam structures are "floating" above the surface and are connected to the main unit without any physical attachment.

Other Opinions

Many different witnesses came forward at the time of the disclosure, from all different professions and walks of life and sightings spanning as far back as 1985. The testimony of these individuals is very hard to ignore. However, the subject matter has been largely ignored thanks to a deliberate debunking campaign. That campaign centered around the misinformation that these craft were simply products of CGI manipulation. Yet the sincerity, depth and breadth of the witness testimony obliterates the theory that this was CGI and / or viral marketing. Some CGI videos appeared, but they were obvious fakes and have nothing in relation to the truth of this subject.

Even some die-hard believers fell for the debunker propaganda and still to this day MOST people are not familiar with the many hours of recorded interviews conducted by Linda Moulton-Howe on this subject, and so simply cite "something they heard in a forum" or "I heard that...". I urge those people to THINK for THEMSELVES.

Internet Searches

This might be the last repository of information concerning the C.A.R.E.T. disclosure in the world. The NSA has been very busy erasing every evidence of this disclosure. Today, it is just about impossible to find anything regarding this. (In the United States. Elsewhere in the world it is still possible to dredge up some information. But it is not at all easy.)

Pretty amazing for a "hoax".

Typically, the NSA wants as many hoaxes as possible to self-propagate on the Internet. This serves the important purpose to "prove" that there is nothing to disclosures and other information regarding extraterrestrials. Obviously the NSA is not treating this disclosure as a hoax, but rather is trying to eliminate all evidence of its existence. Obviously the United States government has devoted time, finance, and every media resource at its disposal to disparage this disclosure.

Just a kind reminder, as if the reader doesn't realize this by now. The media itself is part of the Deep State. They all are educated in the same universities by professors with horrible values, and taught the same things. They go to the same clubs. They socialize with each other. They have the same basic psychological, political, economic and philosophical underpinnings. So, of course, they look at the world through the same lens. And avoid mention of things that might be inconvenient, or conflict with their worldview.

Bing

The Microsoft search engine, out of the United States; Bing.com cannot find anything associated with C.A.R.E.T. at all! This is in every form that I tried. This is absolutely amazing. Absolutely zero hits. In fact, the absence of any kind of hit is indicative of some kind of filtering or omission software; one that specifically censors a given word or phrase. If the reader dares investigate, they will find some text at the bottom of the page that reads "Some results are removed in response to a notice of local law requirement."

My conclusion is that the website absolutely targets the phraseology and omits every discovery from disclosure. Thus, someone, or some organization specifically censors the Bing Search Engine for C.A.R.E.T. terms, words and phrases.

This included "CARET". "C.A.R.E.T.", Isaac, UFO, extraterrestrial, "unspecified" reverse engineering, and all kinds of combinations of the aforementioned statement.

Wikipedia

There used to be a page in Wikipedia concerning C.A.R.E.T. but it has since disappeared. Initially, I believed that it was relocated to some other aligned page, but this was not the case.

Someone deleted the information on Wikipedia. They did so expertly. I sent an e-mail to Wikipedia concerning the deletion. (Not all deletions are so expertly done. There is often some residue of raw links left in the code.

Not in this case. This website was WIPED CLEAN and then SCRUBBED, DISINFECTED, and then POLISHED afterwards.) When I queried about the deletion to the website, I received no response back. That is, in itself unusual, as Wikipedia always have responded to my inquiries previously. The reader should note; they never responded back to me. Therefore, I have no idea what happened regarding it.

To visit Wikipedia to search for this listing go HERE.

Google

In 2011, there was no problem at all finding anything on the Internet regarding C.A.R.E.T.. At that time, it never occurred to me that it would be censored by the US government.

In 2013, when compiling some information, I discovered that it was getting difficult to find the information. Google search results almost uniformly submitted debunking statements in every search result.

As of 2014 you could still locate information concerning C.A.R.E.T. on Google, though you would have to go three or more pages deep before you could find anything of interest.

As of 2015, all traces of C.A.R.E.T. has disappeared from Google and are unable to be found using that search engine.

In 2016, I again attempted to use Google. Absolutely zero hits.

Yahoo

Yahoo is a very famous website. They provide news, e-mail services, and various other services such as Yahoo.Answers. What is not so well known is that they are also a search engine. Since it is not a “priority” search engine, there is every belief that they could find information on this subject. To my surprise, this was true. The American search engine; Yahoo, was very successful in finding hits for this subject.

It is my guess that the NSA doesn’t think that Yahoo! is a viable search engine any longer.

Other Sources

The reader does not have to rely on using American-censored Internet search engines to find information on this disclosure. Here is a collection of sites and sources that one can use directly. It is my sincere hope that they are not blocked in the United States. If they are, I would strongly urge the reader to take a vacation to another nation and use the Internet there (As well as the local search engines. Do not use Google.).

Read Isaac’s original whistle-blower testimony on the C.A.R.E.T program. This is the best site to obtain full resolution scans of all his provided documentation.

The reader should be aware that you might have to use a VPN to tunnel through the Internet blocking software that is installed in most ISP’s in the United States today. Or, alternatively visit a different country than the USA and access these sites. The United States government does ABSOLUTELY block websites that it considers “hostile” to “national interests”. I do not know if these websites fall under this cloak, but I would not put them out of the loop by any stretch of reason.

Our rulers

Here are the people who operate the enormous bureaucracy in the United States. You know, the ones that say one things and do the other. John Brennan. James Clapper, and their ilk.

Alienware

“ What of the characters appearing on the drones being used by Dell for their Alienware computer line? I always tended to think that Dell was approached by the government and used as part of their disinformation campaign. The company was doing poorly before the release of Alienware; if the government or someone posing as an investor were to approach Dell with large a large sum of startup money for a subsidiary, on the condition that the name Alienware and a given "font" be used, how could they refuse? Does anyone know anything about this?"

-Jonas July 1, 2014 at 8:58 am

"I knew about the alienware use of the symbols and graphics of the Caret stuff. It was a clear opportunistic use of the mystery behind this at the moment."

-truthseeking2015 July 27, 2014 at 10:51 pm

The company Alienware uses the C.A.R.E.T. disclosure as a screensaver and wall paper. Nice, but it tends to make people think that this is not a legitimate disclosure. (BTW; what they provide is anything but accurate. The artwork is disconnected nonsense and has and illustrates no constructive purpose. It just looks attractive. It is similar to the writing utilized, but not functional in any way.)

Alienware fake CARET image

CARET images used for profit purposes.

It is important to note that, in general, the misdirection and disinformation strategy for C.A.R.E.T. was a success.

Many people, even ones who you would think would know better, fell for it. As soon as some sort of "reasonable excuse" was presented, everyone went to that solution mindlessly.

Conclusions

During the 1980's into 2007, various strange objects were viewed hovering, floating and moving about in the sky silently. These objects were photographed and discussed.

Odd object or drone.

Strange object that was found floating and hovering silently in the sky. It was photographed as shown.

An entire write up on the various sightings of these drones can be found at TRUTHFALL. They pretty much befuddled everyone who encountered them. No one knew what they were. They look like mechanical contrivances, most certainly but they have no known writing or anything that can be used to identify them.

Another photo of this mysterious drone object. It was taken by a different person at a different location at a different time.

Then, a fellow known as Isaac said that he knew what these items were. He submitted the photos, documents and the text reproduced herein. Other people have also contributed various curiosities...

"I cannot remember whether they told him what it did, or if he discovered it, but he said the characters had to be on this metal, in this order, and in a particular electromagnetic field, they cloaked themselves. He said it worked by bending light. He said that the thing I had taken a picture of was simply malfunctioning, and that is why I saw part of it for a moment. He said it worked on the rods and cones in our eyes, in that it bent light. He said some animals could still see them, but if working properly, they would be nearly invisible. He called it "clear jello".

Other people piped in...

"From what I gathered in my email correspondence from Isaac, he indicated that I was seeing them only because they were being tested by the U.S. and, had they been working properly, I would never have seen it. He said some folks only see the boom or the cage, due to a malfunction of the apparatus that bends light around it; he said that is why sometimes we will swear we just saw something in the air, then suddenly it is gone. He also indicated that dogs may be able to see them even as cloaked, and when we look at what they are barking at, we see nothing."

After the sightings came to prevalence in 2007 a series of badly thrown together CGI YouTube movies and photographs then emerged. Some were produced by fame-seeking photoshop junkies desperate to showcase their 'talents', some by copycats and those desperate for viral video status. However, absolutely none of the CGI hoxers came even remotely close to resembling the original images. Nor could they explain the ever growing number of witnesses, from all ages and walks of life and geographically separate locations in the United States.

There are websites that really go all out to convince everyone that this is all just a hoax. You can go visit them if you want. They are wrong.

This is an actual disclosure of technical information related to the reverse engineering of extraterrestrial technology forty years ago. To understand the level of technology that MAJestic is dealing with, please kindly take a moment to study the linguistic primer.

Mysterious drone.

Strange drone taken at a different time and place by a different person.

Take Aways

There was a disclosure of reverse engineering efforts made during the 1980's of acquired extraterrestrial technology.

This disclosure included excerpts of various documents, photographs, and an explanation.

Following the disclosure, there was a massive debunking effort that involved everything from multiple websites, a small army of trolls, to a music video with CGI effects. Today, most well-known UFO and similar websites consider this to be a hoax.

This is NOT a hoax. It is a real disclosure.

FAQ

Q: Is CARET and PACL a hoax?

A: No. Throughout the 1980's MAJestic had numerous reverse engineering efforts in process. There were also efforts related to providing support to our extraterrestrial benefactors. I cannot directly comment on specific issues, but I can confirm that the information that Isaac provided back in 2007 rings true based on my experiences.

Q: What happened to Isaac?

A: He's probably dead. He gave away and published unacknowledged special access program documentation. He was under the assumption that maybe the worse that would happen to him would be an IRS audit. No. I am afraid that he is probably dead.

Q: What about Metalicman disclosures?

A: My role at this time is doing exactly as I am told. I could not prevent it if I wanted to. And, for what ever it is worth, I hate doing things for free. Yet, I am fucking compelled to do what I am doing. If MAJestic wanted me to stop they would do so.

MAJestic Related Posts – Training

These are posts and articles that revolve around how I was recruited for MAJestic and my training. Also discussed is the nature of secret programs. I really do not know why the organization was kept so secret. It really wasn't because of any kind of military concern, and the technologies were way too involved for any kind of information transfer. The only conclusion that I can come to is that we were obligated to maintain secrecy at the behalf of our extraterrestrial benefactors.

It's 2021 and even the Yahoo search engine has had references to C. A. R. E. T.

BUT a search on swisscows.com will take you to

No one has mentioned the search site DuckDuckGo.com yet. My check using "caret extraterrestrial” as search terms still brings several results, including YouTube videos in the US. We’ll see how long that lasts, but clearly Google has long been compromised. In my experience Bing often seems to give just strange, random results and is essentially worthless.

“Isaac” made very obvious, key mistakes when he made his disclosures: he gave precise years for his hiring and firing at the Xerox facility and mentioned receiving a promotion to a managerial position during his stay. Within a few hours after his disclosures, the government undoubtedly had identified him since only so many employees had worked at the facility from 1984 to 1987 and had been promoted during that time. Really, really unwise. He should have simply said he had worked there years ago and not mentioned the promotion.

He also had mentioned he was retired and hinted he might have been in academia since Xerox. And was he so dumb as to use his real first name with the disclosures? Did he want to be busted, or was he overconfident or naïve that nothing would happen to him?

My hunch is that he might have met the same fate as had MM with planted kiddie porn or some such... It would be interesting to find out.

About word processing, I have some familiarity with the technology and its history. I spotted by myself several obvious fakes, including the attempts to smear John Kerry and George W. Bush with “typewritten” docs over military service, and the various phony Kenyan birth certificates for Barack Obama.

Word processors date from the late 1970s and the tech advanced quickly. Anyone who knows anything about Xerox knows it was at the forefront of computer and word processing tech in the 1980s, and missed introducing a Windows–style computer operating system to the public long before Microsoft by a whisker. My opinion is that the objections are wrong, and the docs reproduced do date from the mid–1980s. They would have been state of the art then, but probably still in beta testing. Just my 2¢ worth.

I think i may know the new direction of the MJ12, though i don;t call it this. In 2012 i was contact by “otherworldly” entities and told about a spiritual amnesia cutting mankind off from a higher state of consciousness which was their divine right – i had been summoned before them due to my abilities at lucid dreaming and astral projection, in which i had been exploring many different worlds year prior. Essentially these beings told me the human mind had been engineered to provide us with a severely dumbed down version of consciousness; this amnesia device was being kept in a sort of black hole that pierced through several dimensions i called the anomaly (Linda Moulton Howe thought this might have been what an MJ12 agent referred to as a cold dark sea during a phone conversation I had with her. My role was to assist with the evolution of consciousness of “humanity” and to assemble the 20 thousand or so who were also in attendance back here in the earth realm.

I was again contacted by these entities and given ALOT of info on this amnesia, a few years later, after i was made to undergo a trial by which I remembered a soul shocking electrocution that happened moments prior to my incarnation into this body. It was only in December of last year that i was put on to the book Alien Interview by Paul Spencer, who I believe you referenced with his work on the MJ12 documents – this was an alleged interview with the alien retrieved from the Roswell crash and I was astounded to find that this alien was talking about the exact same spiritual amnesia – even the electrocution – i had undergone. it was like reading a biography in some parts Flash forward to 2016, it was because of my involvement in the former group i was initiated into another group (who do not exist in any physical form on earth) who were apparently in charge of monitoring the alien presence and interdimensional traffic coming into and out of earth. I called this group the Unseen 5, due to their only being 4 current earth time incarnates, and 1 being of ET origin. From what I was told by the leader, their selection criteria mimicked what you have written about the MJ12s almost exactly: they specifically vet people with a non service to self attitude, and monitor people with skills in specific “metaphysical” areas for recruiting.

Now onto 2019 and once again the first group contacted me; in this particular experience it was confirmed we are living in a simulation/ artificial construct created by the same ones who engineered our minds, exactly what you have said. I was taken to the “holding facility” where we are kept under sedation while our consciousnesses experience this reality.

What i can tell you, whether it is related to MJ12 or not i don't know – is that there seems to be a very real effort to start recruiting those skilled in the areas of astral projection, lucid dreaming and remote viewing etc. If you are interested in chatting more my email should be included

Very interesting. I cannot confirm things that are outside of my experience, but what I can confirm is that there is a whole bunch of things going on that humans haven't a clue about. The unseen realities are like an iceberg with 90% of the reality unseen, unnoticed, and unconsidered. I see that you have tapped into this and are relating your experiences. Certainly they make for good reading as they are adventures in the truest sense. Thank you for your contribution. Others have said similar things off line. I'm so glad you have this up. I saw this when it came out on Coast to Coast, and I've always thought that this was legit. Probably because I've been in the computer business for around 25 years now and this is exactly how I would have presented the information if i'd been working on it. And seriously, who is going to create custom fonts, at various sizes, and have glossy photos with the same fonts. Along with the Q4 review, it's exactly as Issiac describes.

I will say that the one thing that really made me doubt the whole thing is just the selling of "personal anti-gravity"? I just don't see that happening for 50 years if ever. I was recently reviewing The Adam and Eve Story THE ADAM AND EVE STORY (cia.gov) that the CIA declassified in 2013, and it mentions anti gravity weapons from before our time.

And thanks for the additional 2 messages to Linda, I didn't know they existed, I was just really hoping that more had been released since he hints at having much more material. Unfortunately I think your correct that this breach has been sealed permanently.

Really enjoying your site and it's blowing my mind. You know this reality we create is really a delight when you get the crazy you were looking for.

Think I'll be disseminating your site for awhile, keep up the good work and I'd be curious what you think of my old look at a leak of the state of AI in 2007. it's really the last video, fleshmonkeys that discloses everything. <http://digitalsos.com/?p=54>

Top of the range cars. German, especially. Incorporate antigrav technology in their suspension systems, holding seriously heavy chunks of metal, aluminium and leather at a fixed height above the surface. An advanced computer system calibrates height thousands of times a second and makes necessary adjustments. Ride quality unheard of previously regardless of surface quality. In other words the car is floating above the surface. (Not a lot of people know that!)

There are many other applications of antigrav now in use. 5th Gen fighter aircraft, too. All of them. Its just that you most definitely won't read about them in Wired Magazine. The LEM in 1969 also used antigrav tech, if I'm not mistaken.

[258 / 64]The image is a black and white photograph depicting a cityscape with a prominent large blimp flying above the buildings. The blimp is shaped like a large, elongated, and flat-bottomed airship, with a single, elongated, and pointed nose. The city below is densely packed with tall buildings, some of which have ornate architectural details. The buildings vary in height and design, with some featuring domed roofs and others having more traditional architectural styles. The sky above is overcast, and the city appears to be situated in a temperate climate. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the photograph suggests it may be from an earlier era, possibly the early to mid-20th century, given the style of the buildings and the blimp.

Why are old world threads still so sparse on here? It has to be the biggest fucking pill to swallow and fits into just about every agenda there is.

Me personally, I don't like referring to it all as "Tartaria" because the term itself has become a blanket word encompassing the old-world(s), whereas 'Tartaria' was likely just one specific era and/or civilization.

The central part of the cover features two portraits of men, one on each side. The man on the left is wearing a black suit with a white shirt and a black bow tie, and he has a beard. The man on the right is dressed in a dark suit with a white shirt and a black bow tie, and he has a mustache. Both portraits are framed by a red and white striped border. In the center of the cover, there are four circular images of men, each with a different expression and pose. These images are arranged in a square pattern. The men in the images are dressed in military uniforms, and they are holding various objects such as rifles, pistols, and a flag.

The background of the cover is a sepia-toned landscape with trees and a flag. The flag has a red and white striped pattern with a blue field in the center. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of historical or biographical book covers, with a focus on the men in the portraits and the historical context of the Civil War.

A few individuals can be seen walking through the rubble, with one person appearing to be carrying a bag. Picrel is from the civil war and they want you to believe these buildings were destroyed by "fires and cannons"...

Also very peculiar how the Carrington event happened just a couple years before the war kicked off, which makes one believe that both narratives were created to cover-up a cataclysmic event and the raping/pillaging afterwards.

The image is a sepia-toned photograph that appears to be a cover of a book. The central focus of the image is a group of children standing in front of a train. The children are arranged in a line, with some facing the camera and others turned away. The train, which is the background element, is partially visible and appears to be a vintage or old-fashioned train.

At the top of the image, there is a quote in white text that reads, "The cities were empty... but the children were everywhere." The text is centered and appears to be a statement or a title. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of historical or documentary photography, with a focus on the children and the train, suggesting a narrative or theme related to the children's lives or experiences. The sepia tone of the image gives it a vintage or nostalgic feel.

Above the tower, there is a cross symbol, indicating its religious significance. The tower is labeled with the text "Antenna Mercury Gell Harmomizer Frequency Energy Storage," suggesting that it may be a technological device used for communication or energy storage.

The tower is surrounded by a row of buildings, which are also labeled with the text "Antenna Mercury Gell Harmomizer Frequency Energy Storage," indicating that they are also part of the same technological system. The buildings are of a traditional European architectural style, with gabled roofs and ornate details.

The image is labeled with the text "Old world tech - often repurposed as cathedrals, churches, etc." This suggests that the technology depicted in the image is a part of a broader historical context, where such devices were repurposed for religious or civic purposes. The sepia tone of the photograph gives it a vintage feel, suggesting that the image is from an older time period.

The skyline includes several prominent buildings, such as the General Electric Building, the RCA Victor Building, and the New York Public Library. The photograph is accompanied by a text description that provides information about the building and its significance.

The text on the left side of the image is a paragraph that describes the General Electric Building, stating that it was the first skyscraper in the United States to be lit by electric lights. It also mentions that the building was designed by the architect Daniel H. Burnham and was completed in 1913. Not addressing you directly, since you actually are retarded, but those who are new/confused by the term.

The various eras of the old world get labelled as "Tartaria" often, which is a related time and civilization, but should be referenced as an overall blanket term.

I believe it was intentionally convoluted, because while Tartaria was part of the old world and likely a massive civilization, it should NOT a single reference case for ALL civilization(s) lost/reset throughout time.

Picrel is of a Star Fort, definitely recommend looking into these and dismantling the bullshit narrative we are told... "Designed by Europeans" yet found all over the fucking world, including India, Japan, the Netherlands, Americas, and even heavily buried/repurposed throughout China.

You have the same shit you will find with any "construction" photos or footage back then... A bunch of men and shit equipment rolling around, but no actual footage of them building anything... other than facades they bring up, which clearly look like shit, so they can make an excuse to finish demolishing whatever they find possible.

Where is the footage of them actually in the process of CONSTRUCTING anything? Scenes of half built (or half destroyed) shit can certainly shed light on either narrative.

P.S. the world's fairs could very well have also been a thing that was part of the old world and salvaged as well. It would certainly make a great facade in itself and give credence towards the reverse engineering that was occurring under the guise of "the industrial revolution".

You're out of gas and seem to be hung up on world's fairs, so I'll throw you a lifeline...

Let's just focus on the most popular fair, that of Chicago 1893.

NO DEFINITIVE Construction date, just stated as 1891 (so to be fair we'll say 1st January 1891).

Opening date: 1st May 1893

Closing date: 30th October 1893

Total days open: 183

27 million visitors [!!!!] equivalent of 147,540 visitors each day

27 million guests over 6 months would require a large amount of hotel/lodging rooms, on site food, toilet facilities, etc, yet at that time many people in cities preferred to live in lodgings or hotel rooms rather than buy their own house, it being far cheaper, so one must question the availability of so many 'spare', or 'empty' lodging/hotel rooms.

Not only that, travel was expensive at that time, it was often slow and laborious, crossing the Atlantic alone could take up to 5 days, then the only other transport was either by train or stagecoach, although they did have trams in the city (likely salvaged as well)..

>Construction "data"

40,000 employees

690 acres, including area along the city's south lakefront area

150 buildings (14 main buildings)-total floor space of 63 million square feet

Subway total length 6,195ft (1,888m)

75 million board feet of lumber

18,000 tons of iron and steel

120,000 incandescent lights

All works to be completed in just 28 months, of which 9.5 months would have been in the snowy winter period, ground frozen and/or water logged, leaving 18.5 months of, HOPEFULLY, good dry, non windy weather.. in Chicago.

Also, with an average of 58 people per acre, how are we not even seeing more than 5-10 in any given photo?

And where are the blueprints? Not one single fucking blueprint?

Seems to me these (few) "construction" photos are likely depicting deconstruction and include layering models (a technique often used for effects in the 1800s)...

The image is a meme featuring a pair of orange Crocs shoes with holes on the bottom.

The shoes are placed on a dark surface, and the person wearing them is partially visible, with only the lower legs and feet showing. The text overlay on the image reads, "SEE THOSE LITTLE HOLES? THAT IS WHERE YOUR DIGNITY LEAKS OUT." The style of the image is humorous and seems to be a play on the concept of "holes in the socks" or "holes in the shoes," which are often used to describe a lack of dignity or a sense of shame. The meme is likely intended to be humorous and satirical, as it plays on the idea of the vulnerability of one's dignity being exposed by the presence of holes in the shoes.

The image is a digital illustration with a dark, fiery background that resembles a nuclear explosion. In the foreground, there is a character with long, flowing blue hair and green eyes. She appears to be in distress, with her hands covering her ears and her mouth open in a scream. The character is wearing a white and red striped shirt with a red collar. Above the character, the text "TRUTH NUKED" is written in a bold, gold font. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a meme or a satirical illustration, with a focus on the dramatic and intense expression of the character.

The image is a black and white photograph depicting a cityscape with a prominent building in the foreground. The building has a large dome and a series of columns supporting the structure. The architecture suggests it could be a government or institutional building, possibly a courthouse or a similar public building. The building is surrounded by a variety of other structures, including tall buildings with numerous windows, suggesting a dense urban environment.

In the foreground, there is a large body of water, possibly a river or a canal, with a few boats visible on it. The water appears calm, and there are no visible boats in motion.

The cityscape is bustling with activity, with cars and buses visible on the streets, indicating a busy urban area.

The sky is overcast, and the lighting suggests it might be a cloudy day. The image is taken from a high vantage point, looking down on the city, providing a comprehensive view of the urban landscape. There are no visible texts or distinctive markings that provide additional context or information about the location or the time period of the photograph. The style of the image is realistic, capturing the architectural details and the urban environment with clarity.

The image is a vintage movie poster for "The Hidden Hand," featuring a dark, moody color scheme with a predominantly yellow background. The title of the film is prominently displayed in large, bold, white letters at the top of the poster. Below the title, there is a silhouette of a hand with fingers spread out, suggesting a sense of mystery or danger.

The poster includes a collage of several individuals, all dressed in suits and hats, which adds to the dramatic atmosphere. The individuals are depicted in a way that suggests they are in a group, possibly a gang or a secret society. The style of the image is reminiscent of classic film posters from the 1940s or 1950s, with a focus on the use of shadows and lighting to create a sense of depth and intrigue.

At the bottom of the poster, the text "Warner Bros." is visible, indicating the production company associated with the film. The overall design of the poster suggests a film that is likely to be a crime or thriller genre, with a focus on suspense and mystery.

Also, what's the end goal here, and for whom? I'm assuming the usual suspects, but to what end? Simply maintaining power over the people? Was the reasoning that the population reached an apex (maybe too close to figuring out the truth) and was then torn back down to ground level to rebuild again until the cycle starts anew? Are there any theories that these eras just fell to natural disasters or are they, presumably all doubtable? If it is a too-close-to-the-truth angle, what's the over under that we're heading towards the next one in the wake of the population slowly realising what the fuck the ruling classes have been doing on that island?

>All roads lead to Rome

Myself personally, I believe there were both "natural" and unnatural (forced) resets that wiped out a number of civilizations/eras — with a group of benefactors (so you will) that assume control each time and likely have a connection to the benefactors/rulers before them.

I believe this is the true purpose and meaning behind these so called secret societies we know so well... which coincides with their connections to the Phoenix and rebirth. This is also why we find ritualized death in the catacombs, which is likely where these groups (and others) would seek refuge during said events.

Basically they'd go underground, survive/wait everything out, then return up top to rape and reap the spoils of the cataclysm.

I can't point to one specific source to this theory, but there is no doubt that Tartaria/Mudflood/Melted-Buildings/Phoenix/Biblical narratives all point to a "reset" in some form or another...

...which seems eerily familiar to the "great reset" bullshit we are hearing and seeing today — what with DUMBs and billionaire underground bunkers being a very real thing. View SameOCRGoogleiqdbSauceNAOTrace 1687758501503352.jpg, 204KiB, 874x833

Wow the shills really hate this topic huh? I've been casually following it for years. Didn't know they were so freaked out about some people noticing.

If you want to have some fun ask the shills how Big Ben and the other large clocks operated before getting "upgrade" to electricity movements. They actually claim some faggots had to reset large weights in those until the 1960s and of course no one has blueprints to show how the original movements would have worked. They expect you to believe they were just over sized grandfather clocks lol.

The image is a digital illustration of a cartoon duck character. The duck is predominantly yellow with a red beak and feet. It has a simple, cartoon-style design with a large, round head and a small, round body. The duck appears to be standing upright with its legs slightly spread apart. The background is a dark, possibly wooden texture, providing a contrast to the bright yellow of the duck. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of digital art commonly used in video games or animations.

Ah yes these well known youtube videos. Hosted on that website you fags always claim isn't a valid source because "any schizo can upload videos". Suddenly it's a valid source again if you link to state issued propaganda.

Funny there are extensive documentaries all of the sudden when there is not one picture of the original ropes used to hold those massive 4-ton weights. Or any pictures at all of the inside before about the year 1986 after the "re-model". Of those none of them show the weights. Just the top.

But you expect me to believe they just upsized a grandfather clock movement and it all worked out and ran fine for over 100 years. I guess some guy was using horses to wind it every 5 days (assuming it's the same 5 day movement used in most every Grandfather clock). It's almost like I know how Grandfather clocks work because I own more than one and work on them often. Where you're talking out of your ass. Probably why I know upsizing such a movement is fucking retarded and would never work in the real world.

Funny how it recently got "remodeled" again isn't it? They always claim this shit got slapped together in a couple of years but any time they want to change a small part of it they need millions of dollars and years and years of it being offline to do something as simple as changing the light bulbs.

Man you faggots really hate anyone looking into this don't you?

What's your opinion on all the buried floors they keep finding under existing buildings. Or the catacombs and extensive tunnel networks?

I haven't even gotten into the good stuff and you're freaking out because I pointed out the official story on the clock towers is horseshit.

That's the same generation of God haters that exists today who will continue to exist until His return. You are assuming a generation to mean the people living back then, but neither the context nor the rest of scripture supports such understanding at all.

>In what world would depictions of saints ruling in glorified bodies contradict the biblical narrative? It's literally what the bible said would happen in the millennial reign. The image is a collage of four separate photographs, each depicting a different scene within a cave. The cave is characterized by its arched ceilings and walls, which are made of stone.

This is a black and white photograph depicting a large, grand building with a prominent dome and a central pediment. The building has a classical architectural style with ornate detailing and a symmetrical facade. In front of the building, there is a large crowd of people, some of whom are standing and others are walking, suggesting a public event or gathering. The crowd appears to be dressed in formal attire, indicating a formal occasion.

To the left of the building, there is a flagpole with a flag flying, and a flag with a design that resembles a coat of arms is visible. In the foreground, there are several bicycles parked, and a few people are standing near them, possibly observing the event or waiting for their turn.

In the background, there is a large ship with a smokestack, suggesting that the location might be near a harbor or a dock. The sky is overcast, and the overall atmosphere of the image is somber and formal. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the photograph is reminiscent of historical or formal portraiture, capturing a moment in time.

The image shows a cityscape with a prominent, tall building that appears to be a skyscraper. The building has a unique architectural design with a long, slender structure that culminates in a pointed top. The facade of the building is made of brick, and it features numerous windows. The skyscraper is situated in a city environment with other buildings visible in the background. The photo is taken from a low angle, which emphasizes the height of the skyscraper and gives a sense of its dominance in the cityscape. There are no visible texts or distinctive markings on the building that provide additional information. The image is a photograph with a focus on the architectural details of the skyscraper.

The map is oriented with north at the top, and the cardinal directions are marked with arrows pointing to the right. The map is filled with various symbols and notations, including flags, ships, and other geographical features. The style of the map suggests it is from the 16th century, as indicated by the style of the compass rose and the style of the ships depicted. The map is bordered by a thin red line, and there are two small circles at the bottom right corner, which could be interpreted as a watermark or a signature. The image is a digital scan, and the resolution is not high enough to discern fine details. There are no texts visible in the image.

The image is a collage of various elements, each with a distinct style and theme. At the center, there is a large, fiery explosion with a bright red beam emanating from it, suggesting a powerful event or action. To the left, there is a depiction of a large, winged creature with a flame-like appearance, possibly a dragon or a mythical creature. On the right, there is a large, humanoid figure with a red and white striped pattern, resembling a deity or a powerful being.

In the background, there are pyramids and a large, ancient Egyptian obelisk, which are common symbols of ancient Egyptian culture. To the left, there is a flag with the American flag design, and to the right, there is a figure with a blue and gold headdress, possibly representing a deity or a powerful figure.

In the foreground, there are several smaller figures, including a man in a blue robe, a man in a white robe, and a man in a brown robe. These figures are depicted in a realistic style, with detailed clothing and expressions.

The overall color palette of the image is warm, with a mix of earthy tones and bright colors, including reds, blues, and yellows. The style of the image is surreal and fantastical, with elements that are not directly related to each other, creating a collage-like effect.

It's endemic to a larger issue. Civilization has reached the high water mark over and over again, perhaps industrializing dozens or hundreds of times over the last few hundred thousand years. Due to the volatility of the Earth's surface it's very difficult to say exactly how many times this has happened and for how long.

I'd argue the main reason this is suppressed is simply because many of these civilizations are still around in some form; perhaps hidden as breakaways, embedded in elite society, or around other stars. It's far easier for the narrative to label them all as 'aliens' and align them under that disinfo campaign.

The image shows a human skull mounted on a blue grid background. The skull is oriented vertically and is the central focus of the image. It appears to be a fossilized skull, as indicated by the visible cracks and the texture of the bone. The skull has a prominent brow ridge and a small, dark area on the left side, which could be interpreted as a fossilized fossil or a fossilized part of the skull. The teeth are visible, showing a mix of white and brown, and the jawline is visible, with the lower jaw showing a slight curve. The skull is mounted on a stand, and the background is a blue grid pattern, which provides a contrasting backdrop to the skull. There are no texts or additional objects in the image. The style of the image is a straightforward, non-artistic photograph, likely intended for educational or scientific purposes.

The image I replied with is a Peruvian warrior skull of a man who suffered a massive cranial fracture and survived thanks to the metallic surgical implant.

This was done over 2,000 years ago.

The next time in recorded history we would repair a cranial fracture using a metal implant was in the late 1960s.

Plenty of other examples; like Old Kingdom Egyptian medical texts describing spinal surgeries where they knew which specific nerve fibers within the spinal bundle led to which parts of the body.

Now, will you admit you were blatantly and demonstrably wrong with your accusation or will you become even more emotional?

So you are telling me that cranial surgery, which is known to have happened for thousands of years, is somehow a lost technology. It's been done for thousands of years? It's known. It's been done for thousands of years.

It has been done at other times. Pre-Colombian societies did it - they sometimes used gold.

It happened in Victorian era. They even tried aluminium.

It never went away. It's not lost.

You are not even talking about the same topic anymore.

You are lost. You are without substance. Give up bro.

You have no evidence that classical and ancient societies have advancements far beyond what the record shows.

You have evidence they have stuff that is exactly what the records shows.

The image shows a close-up of a weathered, corroded metal object, possibly a part of machinery or equipment. The object has a complex design with multiple components, including a large circular center with a cross-like pattern, surrounded by smaller circular elements. The surface of the object is covered in a greenish patina, suggesting it has been exposed to the elements for an extended period. The object is encased in a clear plastic holder, which allows the viewer to see the details of the metal. The background is blurred, drawing focus to the object in the foreground. There are no discernible texts or brands visible in the image. The style of the image is a close-up photograph with a focus on the texture and details of the metal object.

[258 / 64]The image is a black and white photograph depicting a cityscape with a prominent large blimp flying above the buildings. The blimp is shaped like a large, elongated, and flat-bottomed airship, with a single, elongated, and pointed nose. The city below is densely packed with tall buildings, some of which have ornate architectural details. The buildings vary in height and design, with some featuring domed roofs and others having more traditional architectural styles. The sky above is overcast, and the city appears to be situated in a temperate climate. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the photograph suggests it may be from an earlier era, possibly the early to mid-20th century, given the style of the buildings and the blimp.

Why are old world threads still so sparse on here? It has to be the biggest fucking pill to swallow and fits into just about every agenda there is.

Me personally, I don't like referring to it all as "Tartaria" because the term itself has become a blanket word encompassing the old-world(s), whereas 'Tartaria' was likely just one specific era and/or civilization.

The central part of the cover features two portraits of men, one on each side. The man on the left is wearing a black suit with a white shirt and a black bow tie, and he has a beard. The man on the right is dressed in a dark suit with a white shirt and a black bow tie, and he has a mustache. Both portraits are framed by a red and white striped border. In the center of the cover, there are four circular images of men, each with a different expression and pose. These images are arranged in a square pattern. The men in the images are dressed in military uniforms, and they are holding various objects such as rifles, pistols, and a flag.

The background of the cover is a sepia-toned landscape with trees and a flag. The flag has a red and white striped pattern with a blue field in the center. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of historical or biographical book covers, with a focus on the men in the portraits and the historical context of the Civil War.

Picrel is from the civil war and they want you to believe these buildings were destroyed by "fires and cannons"...

Also very peculiar how the Carrington event happened just a couple years before the war kicked off, which makes one believe that both narratives were created to cover-up a cataclysmic event and the raping/pillaging afterwards.

The image is a sepia-toned photograph that appears to be a cover of a book. The central focus of the image is a group of children standing in front of a train. The children are arranged in a line, with some facing the camera and others turned away. The train, which is the background element, is partially visible and appears to be a vintage or old-fashioned train.

At the top of the image, there is a quote in white text that reads, "The cities were empty... but the children were everywhere." The text is centered and appears to be a statement or a title. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of historical or documentary photography, with a focus on the children and the train, suggesting a narrative or theme related to the children's lives or experiences. The sepia tone of the image gives it a vintage or nostalgic feel.

Not addressing you directly, since you actually are retarded, but those who are new/confused by the term.

The various eras of the old world get labelled as "Tartaria" often, which is a related time and civilization, but should be referenced as an overall blanket term.

I believe it was intentionally convoluted, because while Tartaria was part of the old world and likely a massive civilization, it should NOT a single reference case for ALL civilization(s) lost/reset throughout time.

Picrel is of a Star Fort, definitely recommend looking into these and dismantling the bullshit narrative we are told... "Designed by Europeans" yet found all over the fucking world, including India, Japan, the Netherlands, Americas, and even heavily buried/repurposed throughout China.

You have the same shit you will find with any "construction" photos or footage back then... A bunch of men and shit equipment rolling around, but no actual footage of them building anything... other than facades they bring up, which clearly look like shit, so they can make an excuse to finish demolishing whatever they find possible.

Where is the footage of them actually in the process of CONSTRUCTING anything? Scenes of half built (or half destroyed) shit can certainly shed light on either narrative.

P.S. the world's fairs could very well have also been a thing that was part of the old world and salvaged as well. It would certainly make a great facade in itself and give credence towards the reverse engineering that was occurring under the guise of "the industrial revolution".

You're out of gas and seem to be hung up on world's fairs, so I'll throw you a lifeline...

Let's just focus on the most popular fair, that of Chicago 1893.

NO DEFINITIVE Construction date, just stated as 1891 (so to be fair we'll say 1st January 1891).

Opening date: 1st May 1893

Closing date: 30th October 1893

Total days open: 183

27 million visitors [!!!] equivalent of 147,540 visitors each day

27 million guests over 6 months would require a large amount of hotel/lodging rooms, on site food, toilet facilities, etc, yet at that time many people in cities preferred to live in lodgings or hotel rooms rather than buy their own house, it being far cheaper, so one must question the availability of so many 'spare', or 'empty' lodging/hotel rooms.

Not only that, travel was expensive at that time, it was often slow and laborious, crossing the Atlantic alone could take up to 5 days, then the only other transport was either by train or stagecoach, although they did have trams in the city (likely salvaged as well)..

40,000 employees

690 acres, including area along the city's south lakefront area

150 buildings (14 main buildings)-total floor space of 63 million square feet

Subway total length 6,195ft (1,888m)

75 million board feet of lumber

18,000 tons of iron and steel

120,000 incandescent lights

All works to be completed in just 28 months, of which 9.5 months would have been in the snowy winter period, ground frozen and/or water logged, leaving 18.5 months of, HOPEFULLY, good dry, non windy weather.. in Chicago.

Also, with an average of 58 people per acre, how are we not even seeing more than 5-10 in any given photo?

And where are the blueprints? Not one single fucking blueprint?

Seems to me these (few) "construction" photos are likely depicting deconstruction and include layering models (a technique often used for effects in the 1800s)...

The image is a meme featuring a pair of orange Crocs shoes with holes on the bottom. The shoes are placed on a dark surface, and the person wearing them is partially visible, with only the lower legs and feet showing. The text overlay on the image reads, "SEE THOSE LITTLE HOLES? THAT IS WHERE YOUR DIGNITY LEAKS OUT." The style of the image is humorous and seems to be a play on the concept of "holes in the socks" or "holes in the shoes," which are often used to describe a lack of dignity or a sense of shame. The meme is likely intended to be humorous and satirical, as it plays on the idea of the vulnerability of one's dignity being exposed by the presence of holes in the shoes.

The image is a black and white photograph depicting a cityscape with a prominent building in the foreground. The building has a large dome and a series of columns supporting the structure. The architecture suggests it could be a government or institutional building, possibly a courthouse or a similar public building. The building is surrounded by a variety of other structures, including tall buildings with numerous windows, suggesting a dense urban environment.

In the foreground, there is a large body of water, possibly a river or a canal, with a few boats visible on it. The water appears calm, and there are no visible boats in motion.

The cityscape is bustling with activity, with cars and buses visible on the streets, indicating a busy urban area.

The sky is overcast, and the lighting suggests it might be a cloudy day. The image is taken from a high vantage point, looking down on the city, providing a comprehensive view of the urban landscape. There are no visible texts or distinctive markings that provide additional context or information about the location or the time period of the photograph. The style of the image is realistic, capturing the architectural details and the urban environment with clarity.

The image is a vintage movie poster for "The Hidden Hand," featuring a dark, moody color scheme with a predominantly yellow background. The title of the film is prominently displayed in large, bold, white letters at the top of the poster. Below the title, there is a silhouette of a hand with fingers spread out, suggesting a sense of mystery or danger.

The poster includes a collage of several individuals, all dressed in suits and hats, which adds to the dramatic atmosphere. The individuals are depicted in a way that suggests they are in a group, possibly a gang or a secret society. The style of the image is reminiscent of classic film posters from the 1940s or 1950s, with a focus on the use of shadows and lighting to create a sense of depth and intrigue.

At the bottom of the poster, the text "Warner Bros." is visible, indicating the production company associated with the film. The overall design of the poster suggests a film that is likely to be a crime or thriller genre, with a focus on suspense and mystery.

Is there a definitive, or at least a consistent resource on this topic? Preferably either cited books or documentaries. It's a gap in my knowledge and I'd like to get at least a thorough foundation before going any deeper.

Also, what's the end goal here, and for whom? I'm assuming the usual suspects, but to what end? Simply maintaining power over the people? Was the reasoning that the population reached an apex (maybe too close to figuring out the truth) and was then torn back down to ground level to rebuild again until the cycle starts anew? Are there any theories that these eras just fell to natural disasters or are they, presumably all doubtable? If it is a too-close-to-the-truth angle, what's the over under that we're heading towards the next one in the wake of the population slowly realising what the fuck the ruling classes have been doing on that island?

>All roads lead to Rome

Myself personally, I believe there were both "natural" and unnatural (forced) resets that wiped out a number of civilizations/eras — with a group of benefactors (so you will) that assume control each time and likely have a connection to the benefactors/rulers before them.

I believe this is the true purpose and meaning behind these so called secret societies we know so well... which coincides with their connections to the Phoenix and rebirth. This is also why we find ritualized death in the catacombs, which is likely where these groups (and others) would seek refuge during said events.

Basically they'd go underground, survive/wait everything out, then return up top to rape and reap the spoils of the cataclysm.

I can't point to one specific source to this theory, but there is no doubt that Tartaria/Mudflood/Melted-Buildings/Phoenix/Biblical narratives all point to a "reset" in some form or another...

...which seems eerily familiar to the "great reset" bullshit we are hearing and seeing today — what with DUMBs and billionaire underground bunkers being a very real thing. View SameOCRGoogleiqdbSauceNAOTrace 1687758501503352.jpg, 204KiB, 874x833

Wow the skills really hate this topic huh? I've been casually following it for years. Didn't know they were so freaked out about some people noticing.

If you want to have some fun ask the skills how Big Ben and the other large clocks operated before getting "upgrade" to electricity movements. They actually claim some faggots had to reset large weights in those until the 1960s and of course no one has blueprints to show how the original movements would have worked. They expect you to believe they were just over sized grandfather clocks lol.

The image is a digital illustration of a cartoon duck character. The duck is predominantly yellow with a red beak and feet. It has a simple, cartoon-style design with a large, round head and a small, round body. The duck appears to be standing upright with its legs slightly spread apart. The background is a dark, possibly wooden texture, providing a contrast to the bright yellow of the duck. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of digital art commonly used in video games or animations.

Ah yes these well known youtube videos. Hosted on that website you fags always claim isn't a valid source because "any schizo can upload videos". Suddenly it's a valid source again if you link to state issued propaganda.

Funny there are extensive documentaries all of the sudden when there is not one picture of the original ropes used to hold those massive 4-ton weights. Or any pictures at all of the inside before about the year 1986 after the "re-model". Of those none of them show the weights. Just the top.

But you expect me to believe they just upsized a grandfather clock movement and it all worked out and ran fine for over 100 years. I guess some guy was using horses to wind it every 5 days (assuming it's the same 5 day movement used in most every Grandfather clock). It's almost like I know how Grandfather clocks work because I own more than one and work on them often. Where you're talking out of your ass. Probably why I know upsizing such a movement is fucking retarded and would never work in the real world.

Funny how it recently got "remodeled" again isn't it? They always claim this shit got slapped together in a couple of years but any time they want to change a small part of it they need millions of dollars and years and years of it being offline to do something as simple as changing the light bulbs.

Man you faggots really hate anyone looking into this don't you?

What's your opinion on all the buried floors they keep finding under existing buildings. Or the catacombs and extensive tunnel networks?

I haven't even gotten into the good stuff and you're freaking out because I pointed out the official story on the clock towers is horseshit.

That's the same generation of God haters that exists today who will continue to exist until His return. You are assuming a generation to mean the people living back then, but neither the context nor the rest of scripture supports such understanding at all.

>In what world would depictions of saints ruling in glorified bodies contradict the biblical narrative? It's literally what the bible said would happen in the millennial reign.

You mixed a bunch of weird stuff together with half-assed biblical notions, but the way its presented contradicts scripture hence the confusion. Semantic issue to an extent.

>Fair, but I specifically mentioned the things that are mentioned in the bible when addressing your claim.

Again, these are NOT promises but warnings about what would happen if this or that. The actual promises include the temple of Ezekiel, the beasts becoming docile, magic leave tree, salt waters healed, ceasing of war, Jesus crushing His enemies, Heavenly Jerusalem descending, 100 year old children and a billion other things plus eternity which starts immediately after the end of the Millennium (no gap, which's what we'd be in now in your worldview) and it's marked by the final judgement, end of sorrow and a new earth.

The image is a collage of four separate photographs, each depicting a different scene within a cave. The cave is characterized by its arched ceilings and walls, which are made of stone.

Each photo captures the unique features of the cave, from the intricate patterns on the walls to the unique arrangement of the windows. The collage as a whole provides a comprehensive view of the cave's interior, showcasing its architectural beauty and the variety of its features.

>(average bricks per building) x (number of buildings) / (number of bricks 10k people can move with horses) = (days needed to build the city)

Honestly, though the idea that you'd put numbers to it is hilarious I don't think the answer would be unrealistic.

The image shows a collection of skulls arranged in a wall-like formation. The skulls are of various sizes and orientations, with some appearing to be stacked on top of each other. The skulls are predominantly brown with some showing signs of wear and age.

The background is a dark, possibly rocky or cave-like setting, and the lighting is dim, casting shadows and highlighting the skulls. There are no discernible texts or distinguishing marks on the skulls that provide additional context or information. The style of the image is a close-up photograph with a focus on the skulls, and it appears to be taken in a dimly lit environment, possibly a cave or underground setting.

This is a black and white photograph depicting a large, grand building with a prominent dome and a central pediment. The building has a classical architectural style with ornate detailing and a symmetrical facade. In front of the building, there is a large crowd of people, some of whom are standing and others are walking, suggesting a public event or gathering. The crowd appears to be dressed in formal attire, indicating a formal occasion.

To the left of the building, there is a flagpole with a flag flying, and a flag with a design that resembles a coat of arms is visible. In the foreground, there are several bicycles parked, and a few people are standing near them, possibly observing the event or waiting for their turn.

In the background, there is a large ship with a smokestack, suggesting that the location might be near a harbor or a dock. The sky is overcast, and the overall atmosphere of the image is somber and formal. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the photograph is reminiscent of historical or formal portraiture, capturing a moment in time.

It's endemic to a larger issue. Civilization has reached the high water mark over and over again, perhaps industrializing dozens or hundreds of times over the last few hundred thousand years. Due to the volatility of the Earth's surface it's very difficult to say exactly how many times this has happened and for how long.

I'd argue the main reason this is suppressed is simply because many of these civilizations are still around in some form; perhaps hidden as breakaways, embedded in elite society, or around other stars. It's far easier for the narrative to label them all as 'aliens' and align them under that disinfo campaign.

The image shows a human skull mounted on a blue grid background. The skull is oriented vertically and is the central focus of the image. It appears to be a fossilized skull, as indicated by the visible cracks and the texture of the bone. The skull has a prominent brow ridge and a small, dark area on the left side, which could be interpreted as a fossilized fossil or a fossilized part of the skull. The teeth are visible, showing a mix of white and brown, and the jawline is visible, with the lower jaw showing a slight curve. The skull is mounted on a stand, and the background is a blue grid pattern, which provides a contrasting backdrop to the skull. There are no texts or additional objects in the image. The style of the image is a straightforward, non-artistic photograph, likely intended for educational or scientific purposes.

The image I replied with is a Peruvian warrior skull of a man who suffered a massive cranial fracture and survived thanks to the metallic surgical implant.

This was done over 2,000 years ago.

The next time in recorded history we would repair a cranial fracture using a metal implant was in the late 1960s.

Plenty of other examples; like Old Kingdom Egyptian medical texts describing spinal surgeries where they knew which specific nerve fibers within the spinal bundle led to which parts of the body.

Now, will you admit you were blatantly and demonstrably wrong with your accusation or will you become even more emotional?

So you are telling me that cranial surgery, which is known to have happened for thousands of years, is somehow a lost technology. It's been done for thousands of years? It's known. It's been done for thousands of years.

It has been done at other times. Pre-Colombian societies did it - they sometimes used gold.

It happened in Victorian era. They even tried aluminium.

It never went away. It's not lost.

You are not even talking about the same topic anymore.

You are lost. You are without substance. Give up bro.

The image shows a close-up of a weathered, corroded metal object, possibly a part of machinery or equipment. The object has a complex design with multiple components, including a large circular center with a cross-like pattern, surrounded by smaller circular elements. The surface of the object is covered in a greenish patina, suggesting it has been exposed to the elements for an extended period. The object is encased in a clear plastic holder, which allows the viewer to see the details of the metal. The background is blurred, drawing focus to the object in the foreground. There are no discernible texts or brands visible in the image. The style of the image is a close-up photograph with a focus on the texture and details of the metal object.

When you are feeling negative emotions that means you are having an unfulfilled positive emotion in your life. And the quickest but also shortest and corrupting way to fulfill that emotion is by feeding it negative emotions. It's like eating cheap junk food versus actually finding the ingredients (tracing back to why you feel that way) and going through the pain of cooking a good meal yourself.

In the background, there is a planet with a cityscape, and several other planets can be seen in the distance. The overall style of the image is surreal and fantastical, with a blend of real-world elements and elements of science fiction. There are no texts present in the image.

When Obama said aliens are real on that podcast, according to President Trump what he said was "classified information." This is the closest thing to ultimately prove aliens exist. What the actual fuck.

Trump is trying really hard to not slip up and admit it's the longest running psyop in American history. What's classified is that the aliens aren't aliens and that "their" tech was developed here by humans for human purposes. You're not supposed to comment on it at all. You do not deny or confirm. That's what Trump is implying.

obama saying they're real, along with him having former access to this sort of information saying they are, would be why trump brought it up. one flows into the other when it comes to a president stating things for certain. in the least, the us has classified information proving the existence of aliens, it's just not what popular culture tends to think insofar as what the presidents have access to.

i'm guessing they've discovered signals or some other signs from space, which makes sense and is realistic.

Very well could be made into something that benign, but seeing as trump fully leaned in and announced the declassification of UAP/UFO and more specifically alien life/E.T...

The background is dark, with a gradient from purple to black, and there are speech bubbles with text. The text in the speech bubbles is in a stylized font and reads:

"Make sure to the only one holding your breath is the one you're not right on her. He's due for a proper break."

The text is in a combination of purple and black colors, with the speech bubbles being the most prominent. The characters appear to be in a state of surprise or shock, with the character on the left having a hand extended towards the character on the right, as if reaching out or gesturing. The overall style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the characters' expressions and the dynamic poses.

It could have that potential in large parts of the world, and in certain communities. Most people in NA, europe, east asia, won't really give more of a fuck outside "what do we know" "what don't we know" "how are we going to know more". A lot of the historical...mishandling will be brushed aside for pragmatic reasons.

imagine youre an alien rave that just got kicked out of another universe for being bad and annoying. you and your pals are ejected to a distant universe in a small galaxy and in a relatively unpopulated part of that galaxy. you make do, find a place to survive. so you land near a primitive planet, maybe you put your space ship into nearby orbit and terraform the planet to make it habitable. oops, you accidentally kill off a native species that could have been a food source. oh well so you just decide to make do with whats left still surviving. you land on the planet and find the sun is overbearing so you dig tunnels and live underground just coming up to eat the two legged primitive creatures. oops, you eat them to near extinction and realize they are too dumb to repopulate enough to sustain your species as a food source. thats easy, lets make them smarter with technology and make sure theres enough food to go around. that works but then they are now too smart and start making weapons to fight back. hmm, they need a controlling distraction. so you give them a little show, tell a few of them a few stories, make a few promises. thatll work! the story needs tweaking every now and again but you do notice the weapons are getting more and more advanced. what do? maybe we tell a few, promise them some cool stuff but in exchange they gotta keep us fed. deal done, but to prove they wont say anything, those helpers gotta do like we do, maybe even let us use their bodies to hang around their world because living underground is kinda boring.

still some regular humans are noticing. maybe show some cool stuff in the sky, just dont let them look down too much, keep them distracted, entertained. build a cage. use your tech from your old universe which will last for a thousand years. we'll figure out a new cage later.

cant figure out new cage, maybe the parties over. other planetary visitors have been waiting for the cage to break, because that keeps them out as well as us in. shit. maybe one last party? maybe kill most humans so planet looks dead to outsiders who also want to eat our food source. may have to fight over the food.

When the spinning ball-Earth is finally exposed worldwide for the 400+ year deception it was, Earth's entire population will suddenly be faced with the reality that every government, every space agency, university, secret society, religious organization, mainstream and alternative media outlet have ALL been duplicitous in propping up a monstrous manipulation to fleece and control the masses. The resulting mass mental exodus away from the control system is exactly what humanity needs. Once the flat Earth truth gets out, these lying politicians, spokesmen, reporters and teachers suddenly change from being heralded voices of authority to being ridiculed, shunned and denounced as they deserve. Once the flat Earth truth gets out, these governments, universities, media outlets and other entangled organizations which have long been hard at work weaving this multi-generational ball-Earth myth, suddenly and completely lose all credibility. Once the truth of our flat Earth gets out, so does the truth of these few elite families/societies who have kept this most important and fundamental reality from us for these hundreds of years! Essentially, once the flat Earth truth gets out, so does every other important truth by proxy, because this "mother-of-all-conspiracies" holds under its umbrella literally ALL of the other conspiracies, and exposes them.

The image is a screenshot of a text, likely from a religious or philosophical text, with a dark background and white text. The text is in English and appears to be discussing the concept of an end of an age, as indicated by the heading "Navigating the end of an age." The text discusses the existence of conscious Orthodox Christian lives in a world that is clearly fallen, both on the earth below and the stars above. It mentions that all beings are equally far from the lost paradise, and that the first man, Adam, is part of a suffering mankind. The text also references the redemption offered by the Son of God, the sacrifice of the Cross, and the existence of a higher state or being. The text is dense and discusses various theological concepts, such as the existence of angels, the nature of sin, and the possibility of resisting the future religion of an antichrist. The style of the text is formal and academic, with a focus on theological and philosophical themes.

It finally benefits the elite to begin disclosure.

1. Distraction from the files and the 'Age of Aquarius'
2. Consolidates world power when we humans have to represent Earth (one world gov kekw)
3. The tech they've been hiding
4. Their last ditch effort in controlling civilization as we watch it collapse rn
5. Even more control by potentially introducing fake religion
6. Blue Balls inc

This is all true whether aliens are actually real or not. In the case that aliens aren't real - more control and power for the elites. In the case that they are real - then hopefully we can stay out of galactic wars type shit but ofc we won't lol. But they still gain control of the narrative and power. It's a win/win for them now.

one thing you must understand about governments and institutions of power.

they are doing all this because it is in their interests to do so. qui bono? them, not you. so keep that in mind. even if it results in normies brains breaking, that was their intended goal. classification only exists to cover their own wrongdoing and allow enough time to pass to let those responsible off the hook. where are the 911 files? they were promised, but we wont see those until those responsible cant be touched. anyone in a position of power did something to get there that if found out could remove that power. that is the system we created and continue to support. what will happen to civilization wont be any worse than what has already happened. dont worry about it. you will adapt to the new system or it will kill you. either way, nothing to fear

The image is a cover for a video game titled "XCOM Terror from the Deep." The cover art features a close-up of a large, green, scaly creature's hand with sharp, pointed fingers. The creature's skin is textured with scales, and its fingers are curled into a claw-like shape. The background is a deep blue, with bubbles and water droplets scattered throughout, giving the impression of a deep, dark ocean or sea.

At the top of the image, there is a quote in white text that reads, "From the makers of XCOM: UFO Defense comes a new evolution of evil." Below the quote, in smaller white text, is the name "XCOM" in a stylized font. The title "Terror from the Deep" is prominently displayed in large, bold red letters at the bottom of the image.

At the bottom of the image, there is a logo for "Micro Prose Strategy," indicating the game's publisher. The overall style of the image is graphic and dramatic, with a focus on the creature's menacing appearance and the text that suggests the game's theme and genre.

Also maybe abduction cases where the glowies got involved.

I wouldn't bet too much on actual current shit like tech found or gotten reverse engineered getting disclosed or if there is current military like presence

And you retards only ever get worked up when someone mentions an -ism you happen to believe in. Do you get just as mad when someone mentions Communism too? I doubt it.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a close-up of an alien head. The alien has a large, round eye with a prominent pupil, and its facial features are not clearly visible due to the angle and quality of the image. The skin texture appears rough and uneven, with a slight sheen, suggesting a possible texture or material that could be a form of skin or a synthetic material. The background is dark and out of focus, which emphasizes the alien's face. There are no discernible texts or additional objects in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of vintage or retro photography, with a grainy texture that gives it a somewhat aged appearance.

UFOs will appear, and even real abductions will happen but do not go chasing or filming them.

They are not aliens. They are demons.

This deception is meant to hide the rapture of Christ, to counterfeit signs and wonders, and to label it all as an "alien invasion," in order to unify the world like a second Tower of Babel.

Do not believe them.

They are people who follow Satan.

Hold fast only to the Word, which is the Truth, and fix your eyes on Jesus Christ alone. Otherwise, you will fall into the deception that even the elect could be deceived by

The image is a composite of two separate photographs. In the upper portion, there is a photograph of a man pointing towards a UFO hovering above a tropical island. The man is wearing a dark suit with a white shirt and a dark tie, and he has a light complexion. He is pointing upwards with his right hand, and his left hand is extended towards the UFO. The UFO is a large, metallic, disc-shaped object with a rounded top and a pointed nose. It is hovering above the island, which is lush with greenery and has a few buildings and palm trees.

In the lower portion of the image, there is a photograph of a man standing on a hill overlooking a coastal area. The man is wearing a dark suit with a white shirt and a dark tie, and he has a light complexion. He is pointing towards the same UFO as in the upper photograph. The background of the lower photograph shows a coastline with a body of water and a few islands.

Overlaying the image is a speech bubble with the text "Hey look over there!" The speech bubble is in a light blue color and is positioned above the man's head. The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, combining elements of a real-life event with a fictional narrative.

Fren, there is NO SUCH THING AS A RAPTURE (in the retarded evangelical sense).

It's a heresy built upon another serial-heresy inferred from ONE LINE OF SCRIPTURE by a 15 year old child.

Evangelicals are truly insane for twisting scripture in such a perverted way.

Just imagine how many 'christians' (normies who attend church 2-4x a year and quote a verse in their bio) "the rapture" doctrine will take down to hell because "hey we cant fuck up by following the AC cuz ze lawd will save us beforehand 8)"

Other than that yes I agree with you brother.

But just to be clear, 'demons' are a spirit. These however are demonic entities. Whether they're of the fallen in 3D form, or chimeric beings made by them preflood is up for debate.

The image is a cartoon drawing with a satirical tone, featuring a man playing a violin.

The man is depicted with a surprised expression, with his mouth open wide and his eyes wide open. He is wearing a suit and tie, and his hair is styled in a slicked-back manner. The violin he is playing is yellow with a black bow. The background is white, and there are various texts and phrases superimposed on the image.

At the top, there is a text that reads "ONE-MAN BAND" in bold, capitalized letters.

Below this, there is a phrase that says "TWEEEEET SCREEECH!" in a stylized, exaggerated font.

To the right of the man, there is a large text that reads "BOOM BOOM BOOM" in a bold, capitalized font. The man's face is partially obscured by the text, with only his mouth and eyes visible.

its funny that some still believe there is a two party system or warring factions within the ruling class. this was coordinated to get everyone on the same page. obama plays bad cop this time, trump offers to "save" him from the classified mishap. the classified was what he said about area 51, bot the aliens, but either way, it was coordinated. obama gave trump a reason to talk about it.

the ruling class desperately need a civil war or at least major conflict so they have justification for digital ids and the new surveillance state that palaltir is so desperate to install. mexico today is a false flag for their system to be implemented. they dont want to have to false flag the usa again but they will. the better narrative is civil unrest.

aliens from outer space arent real, the others claim to be descendants of the dinosaurs and are reptile living underground. they have been referred to a number of ways over the millennia. gods, demons, angels, and now aliens.

JE stated he wanted to restart a rosicrucian order and it seems he did. the rose and cross symbolism have been all over the past 30 or 40

The aliens are already here.

The originals are the one who created the matrix system.

You are here because you fell from heaven to fuck women, etc. in the rebellion.

You have already been chosen to be reconciled to The Lord God.

The World, Your Body is an Idol. It does not belong to you, ye who is in trespass.

The Jews murdered Yahuwshu, at the Lord God With Us (Emmanu EL) for trolling them, >Does it not say in your own law, 'Ye are god(((s)))'.

Gods is Elohim, plural.

The Lord God EL is The Most High Elohim.

Man is made in the image of the plural thing, The Lord God does not create embodiment-idolatry systems, but gods did. The most subtle, cunning beast did. A cainable system.

Eve BEGETS a "Man OF The Lord" as her euphemism for Lucifer.

She is Beguiled; Wholly Seduced.

Then, she teaches AdAm what she's learned.

The Adulteress berths two lines,

Hetero-Paternal Superfecundation.

Cain and Able this is the Cainable system.

The image displays a close-up of a green, circular pendant with a serpentine design.

The serpent is coiled around a central, circular element that resembles a sun or moon.

The pendant is attached to a dark, braided cord that hangs from the top of the image.

The background is a textured, light-colored wall with a subtle pattern. The style of the image is a still photograph with a focus on the pendant, which is the central subject.

There are no visible texts or discernible brands within the image.

The image is a black and white illustration that depicts a scene from ancient times. At the center of the image, a large, muscular figure with a bald head and a beard is holding a baby in its arms. The figure is wearing a long, flowing robe and a headdress with a feather. The baby is being held by a group of people who are kneeling in front of the figure. The people are dressed in long robes and are holding various objects, including a bowl and a staff. The background of the image shows a landscape with trees and a mountainous terrain. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of historical or religious art, with a focus on the interaction between the central figure and the surrounding figures.

The image is a snapshot of a text in a language that appears to be English, with some text in a different language, possibly Chinese, indicated by the use of a different color and formatting. The text is divided into two columns, with the first column containing the English text and the second column containing the Chinese text. The English text is in a larger font size and is in a bold typeface, while the Chinese text is in a smaller font size and is in a regular typeface.

The English text reads: "Penang, 22/8/70. The gates of an English school near here were locked yesterday to keep out hundreds of people curious to meet six pupils who claimed they saw a flying saucer landed packed with spacemen three inches high. The pupils' story made headlines in the English language Press yesterday and detectives went to Stowell School, at Tukit Mertajam, to question the children. Two boys, aged 10 and 12, said they were prepared to swear in a temple their story was true. One boy claimed he saw five spacemen one in a yellow uniform with horns on his head and the others in blue uniforms. 'When I tried to catch them, the one in the yellow uniform was gone.'"

The Chinese text is not fully visible, but it appears to be a continuation of the English text, with the same structure and content. The text is in a smaller font size and is in a regular typeface, which is consistent with the rest of the text in the image. The text is not in a language that is commonly used for translation, suggesting that the image may be from a non-English-speaking region or that the text is in a non-English language that is not commonly used for translation.

>HOLY FUCK DA GUBMENT SAID AYYs ARE REAL GUYS... >THIS IS THE BEST PROOF WE EVER DUN SEEN

There's plenty of evidence pointing to them existing already; Religion is one of them. Don't you find it odd that humans all around the world, all at the same time, even the isolated tribes like native indians, saw "people in the sky" come down and talk to them/teach them stuff?

What he will release though, will be nothing we haven't heard already. "Uhh, yeah they're in the sky, they're strange, we don't know anything else about them."

I doubt he's gonna show tapes of an ayy interview, or even allude to what they look like/who they are. He'll probably allude to them being chinese or russian drones.

The closest you'll ever get to the truth, would ironically be to hear it from a non-bot /x/ schizo, or by being unlucky enough to meet them yourself. They seem to love plausible deniability though, so it would likely happen in a dream, assuming they let you keep the memories.

Bedtime story propaganda. You can love without having to become a "demon". Fuck it, I don't give a shit anymore.

Our world is horse shit, like a rich guy's Koi Pond in his front yard.

We were constructed to be here, on purpose, with this exact star system setup.

Our whole world is by design, but I can only say with certainty, that the design is because of that blue being I met when I was 26.

I only mentioned the grey incident at 7, because I have never heard of another abductee that ever just tried punching them in the face. I did. Also, just to establish that I am one of the repeat abductees.

The problem I personally have, is I've never seen the same thing twice. Doesn't feel like the same groups.

Like I am somehow the hot commodity, and multiple groups all want to come get a piece or something.

If they do this disclosure thing, and don't bring up the abduction phenomenon, I'm going to be a little upset, but it's fine, for some reason it's a pill that's too hard for people to swallow, that things would come here, and not want to contact, but DO want to pick up random people and analyze them.

Why the fuck is it so hard to believe? We do that same shit all day long, up and down the animal kingdom.

You know radio waves occur naturally, right?

FM is a spectrum of waves.

Humans modulate/demodulate frequencies in the FM range, which is how radios work: radios demodulate a specific frequency in the FM range.

Or AM.

Same modulation/demodulation.

Basically modems.

A modem is a Modulator/Demodulator:

Modem

Anything emitting radio waves, like the background radiation of the universe, isn't necessarily as noteworthy as the slookypasta written by a 13 year old portrays.

What's cooler than a spookypasta?

Science.

Go down the rabbit hole of radio waves.

It's pretty neat.

My mother, to my knowledge, isnt a nut for that this kind of stuff at all, but she took me to this woman who explained I could see auras and told me about the various colours and what they meant. I think we only went once, not sure how mother would've found such a person given it was the early-mid 00's and she wasnt really tech literate, excluding facebook

I lost the "ability" to see these supposed auras by the time I got to high school (age 11) and I dont really think about it much, I always thought it was horse shit because I'd see them say more if I rubbed my eyes, but people often say children have a better connection to the paranormal or whatever

The image is a screenshot of a text message conversation, primarily in a dark green color with white and black text. The conversation appears to be between two individuals, as indicated by the names "View Soren" and "Anonymous" at the top of the message. The conversation is about a trip to Denmark, with the sender mentioning that they are 13 years old and have been on a trip for 3 days. The sender is planning to visit Denmark and is looking for a group of friends to join them. They mention that they are going to visit a place called "Denmark" and are looking for a group of 10 people to join them. The sender is also looking for a group of 100 people to join them for a push-ups challenge.

The conversation also includes a list of tasks that the sender is planning to do, such as making food for the teachers, cleaning up after the trip, and making a "1000 push-ups" challenge. The sender is also planning to sleep in an ancient Viking grave and is looking for a local forest to visit. The sender is also planning to make a "1000 sit-ups" challenge. The conversation also includes a mention of a "Teenage logic" and a "Teenage logic" joke, which is a reference to a popular internet meme. The sender is also planning to "When inside in our sleeping bags with our flashlights, we start joking about how Frida would come down and show us her naked body."

The conversation ends with a statement that the sender is "still think it's there to this day, like it's a literal ghost," and the sender is "like to think that either room king and queen were buried there, were happy to have company. But I'm not sure, desus." This suggests that the sender is still unsure about the presence of the room king and queen in the location.

The photograph shows a house at night with a dark sky and a silhouette of a person standing in front of it. The person appears to be wearing a green sweater and has a hat on their head. The text surrounding the photograph is in a style that resembles a meme, with a mix of humor and seriousness.

The conversation is in a format that resembles a Reddit post, with a title at the top and a list of comments underneath. The text is written in a casual, conversational tone, with the author using emojis and punctuation to emphasize certain points. The author seems to be discussing a photograph they took, mentioning that they forgot to mention that it's a bit of a photography fail. They also mention that the photo is not very good, and they are sorry for the length of the text.

>Asked the blue "How advanced are you?"

>I felt like I pissed it off

>It proceeded to take me about 5 billion years in the past, and it made me watch as it built our star, Sol, right in front of me.

Fuck it, I don't give a shit anymore.

Our world is horse shit, like a rich guy's Koi Pond in his front yard.

We were constructed to be here, on purpose, with this exact star system setup.

Our whole world is by design, but I can only say with certainty, that the design is because of that blue being I met when I was 26.

I only mentioned the grey incident at 7, because I have never heard of another abductee that ever just tried punching them in the face. I did. Also, just to establish that I am one of the repeat abductees.

The problem I personally have, is I've never seen the same thing twice. Doesn't feel like the same groups.

Like I am somehow the hot commodity, and multiple groups all want to come get a piece or something.

If they do this disclosure thing, and don't bring up the abduction phenomenon, I'm going to be a little upset, but it's fine, for some reason it's a pill that's too hard for people to swallow, that things would come here, and not want to contact, but DO want to pick up random people and analyze them.

Why the fuck is it so hard to believe? We do that same shit all day long, up and down the animal kingdom.

You know radio waves occur naturally, right?

FM is a spectrum of waves.

Humans modulate/demodulate frequencies in the FM range, which is how radios work: radios demodulate a specific frequency in the FM range.

Or AM.

Same modulation/demodulation.

Basically modems.

A modem is a Modulator/Demodulator:

Modem

Anything emitting radio waves, like the background radiation of the universe, isn't necessarily as noteworthy as the slookypasta written by a 13 year old portrays.

What's cooler than a spookypasta?

Science.

Go down the rabbit hole of radio waves.

It's pretty neat.

My mother, to my knowledge, isnt a nut for that this kind of stuff at all, but she took me to this woman who explained I could see auras and told me about the various colours and what they meant. I think we only went once, not sure how mother would've found such a person given it was the early-mid 00's and she wasnt really tech literate, excluding facebook

I lost the "ability" to see these supposed auras by the time I got to high school (age 11) and I dont really think about it much, I always thought it was horse shit because I'd see them say more if I rubbed my eyes, but people often say children have a better connection to the paranormal or whatever

The image is a screenshot of a text message conversation, primarily in a dark green color with white and black text. The conversation appears to be between two individuals, as indicated by the names "View Soren" and "Anonymous" at the top of the message. The conversation is about a trip to Denmark, with the sender mentioning that they are 13 years old and have been on a trip for 3 days. The sender is planning to visit Denmark and is looking for a group of friends to join them. They mention that they are going to visit a place called "Denmark" and are looking for a group of 10 people to join them. The sender is also looking for a group of 100 people to join them for a push-ups challenge.

The conversation also includes a list of tasks that the sender is planning to do, such as making food for the teachers, cleaning up after the trip, and making a "1000 push-ups" challenge. The sender is also planning to sleep in an ancient Viking grave and is looking for a local forest to visit. The sender is also planning to make a "1000 sit-ups" challenge. The conversation also includes a mention of a "Teenage logic" and a "Teenage logic" joke, which is a reference to a popular internet meme. The sender is also planning to "When inside in our sleeping bags with our flashlights, we start joking about how Frida would come down and show us her naked body."

The conversation ends with a statement that the sender is "still think it's there to this day, like it's a literal ghost," and the sender is "like to think that either room king and queen were buried there, were happy to have company. But I'm not sure, desus." This suggests that the sender is still unsure about the presence of the room king and queen in the location.

[10 / 2]The image is a still from a video, featuring a character that appears to be a puppet or a similar animated figure. The character is standing in a room with a bookshelf filled with various items, including books and what seems to be a collection of figurines. The character is wearing a red hoodie and has a large, spiky red mohawk on its head. It has large, round, expressive eyes and a wide, open mouth, giving it a surprised or excited expression. The character's eyes are wide open, and its mouth is slightly open, suggesting it is speaking or expressing surprise. The room has a warm, inviting atmosphere with a soft, warm light illuminating the space. The character is positioned in the foreground, with the bookshelf and other items in the background. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the character and its surroundings.

The machine elves. They're literal sentient super quantum machines that are used by God to 'machine' reality as we know it. You are SURROUNDED by them. They're all watching you. They are literally in your walls. They are in your computer monitor. They're in the objects all around you everywhere in the world and the heavens above. The heavenly ones are called dragons.

Basically whats happening to humans is, we're being observed by the entire universe. And we're being judged too.

The watchers don't really mind. They just go "oh look, hes pooping hehehe." Then they start mocking you.

Reverse uno the humiliation ritual back at the watchers and wave your pecker in their faces! Bunch of assholes!

Humans bro. Because humans have the capacity for both good and evil, angelic and demonic, heaven and hell. But even then, Humans are ultimately created in the image of God, and so one day they will return back towards the Kingdom of Heaven where they rightfully belong. That's what makes them a heavenly being that is neither an angel nor a demon, but a human being.

No its not. I can see them. They're everywhere. There's no way around it. The machine elves were created to SERVE. Just like the Bible says.

The ancient Heebs were aware of the matrix. The Celts were too. The Celts had a more friendly approach to the fair folk though. The Heebs believe they're mostly all demons. It is a mystery but I can tell you for sure. That is what it is and that is why the Heebs forbade sorcery. Because it reveals that these elves have been orchestrating reality in our faces this whole time. And you were all none-the-wiser. Everything you experience here was being moved around like a massive hivemind moving pawns across the world like a chess board.

They can influence your thoughts too. They torture people too. For fun. They deceive people into committing evil deeds so they'll go to hell on judgement day.

Odin is fake. He's a late antiquity invention that attempted to meld Zalmoxis and Cronos into a Grandfather God figure, with Thor as the Zeus approximate. How he is known today is a very recent syncretic character, and in earlier times he was essentially known as the rather unimportant husband of Frigg, who was a much bigger deal than him.

At the top of the image, there is text in a script that is not clearly legible due to the resolution and angle of the photograph. The text appears to be in Latin, and it is written in a serif font. The style of the illustration suggests it could be from a historical or medieval period, possibly from a manuscript or a book. The overall color palette is muted, with the brown of the figure's clothing and the blue of the tunic standing out against the pale background.

The character has a long, dark hair that cascades down their back, and they are wearing a headpiece with a pattern that includes what appears to be horns and other intricate designs. The character's eyes are closed, and their mouth is slightly open, suggesting a contemplative or meditative state.

The character is holding a sword with a dark, ornate hilt, which is also adorned with intricate designs. The sword is held in a way that suggests readiness or readiness for action. The background of the image is dark and somewhat blurred, which puts the focus on the character.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a signature that reads "ANX". The signature is in a smaller font compared to the main character, and it is placed in a way that it does not distract from the main subject but is still clearly visible. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of fantasy or horror genres, with the character's attire and the sword being key visual elements.

The coin has a border that is intricately designed with floral patterns and geometric shapes. The background of the coin is a rich, golden color, and there is a watermark text at the bottom of the image that reads "Ancient gold disc showing the worlds oldest inscription referring to Norse god Odin National Museum of Finland."

The style of the image is a straightforward, high-resolution photograph with a focus on the coin's detailed design and inscriptions. The lighting is even, ensuring that the coin's details are clearly visible. The image is a clear and detailed representation of the coin, intended to showcase its historical and cultural significance.

The image is a digital painting that depicts a scene with a central figure on horseback, who appears to be a figure of ancient or mythological origin. The figure is wearing a long, flowing robe and a hat with a pointed top, suggesting a figure of importance or a deity. The figure is holding a spear in one hand and a staff in the other, and is mounted on a white horse with a mane and tail that are visible. The horse is galloping, and the rider's posture is dynamic, with one leg raised and the other bent at the knee.

The background of the painting is a dark, starry sky with a sense of depth, and there is a landscape below that includes a body of water, trees, and a small village or settlement. The overall color palette is dominated by shades of blue, white, and gray, with accents of green and brown. The painting style is expressive and has a fantasy or mythological theme, with a focus on the central figure and the surrounding elements.

The image is a digital illustration with a surrealistic style, featuring a group of characters in a desert-like environment. The characters are anthropomorphic, with exaggerated features and exaggerated expressions. They are depicted in various poses, some standing, some running, and some in mid-action. The background is a gradient of warm colors, transitioning from blue at the top to orange at the bottom.

In the upper left corner, there is a caption that reads "DUALITY" in bold, capitalized letters. Below the illustration, there is a paragraph of text that provides context for the image. The text is in a smaller font size compared to the illustration, and it discusses the concept of duality, suggesting that the characters represent different aspects or aspects of a single entity.

In the lower right corner, there is a battery with the brand name "DURACELL" written on it. The battery is depicted in a standard cylindrical shape with a metallic finish.

The image is a digital artwork, and the style is reminiscent of comic book or graphic novel illustrations, which are often used to convey a sense of humor or to explore themes of duality and the human condition.

His energy is great, sort of similar to Shiva's but with a more racial focus on white people and Nordic heritage and ancestry. He's very intelligent, cunning, witty and kind. Also very powerful, a very commanding and attention-grabbing presence like he is absolutely in charge of the world and its inhabitants, other Gods and Daemons included, save for spiritual powers like that of the Abrahamics and especially Jews, whomst were the first to label the Gods of our ancestors to be evil and replace them with one with characters and a god that serve their purposes in different flavors of goy depending on your region.

And remember: the Qlippoth is Jewish Kabbalah. Expect no actual wisdom or true divine help or presence. You will get Jewish inversions and trickster thoughtforms masquerading as Gods and Jewishly-labeled "Demons."

The image depicts an ancient Egyptian relief sculpture, possibly of a deity or a pharaoh, rendered in a style reminiscent of ancient Egyptian art. The figure is depicted in profile, with a raised arm holding a staff, and a long, flowing beard. The figure is adorned with a headdress and a red and white striped garment, which is typical of ancient Egyptian attire. The background of the relief is a light beige color, with a rough texture that suggests it is made of stone or a similar material. The overall style of the image is realistic, with meticulous attention to detail in the depiction of the figure's clothing and the texture of the background. The image does not contain any discernible text.

I would like to know more about when that happened though, as it doesn't seem to be a "divergent" pan-germanic emergence, some Roman (late republic ?/early imperial) sources seem to suggest Odin was the chief god, but some migration era sources suggest the Goths still had their Tyr cognate as the "chief"

The image is a screenshot of a text message, specifically a Reddit post. The text is in a language that appears to be English, and it discusses a religious concept known as "the Christian church's cannibalism ritual." The text is divided into two columns, with the left column containing the main text and the right column containing a list of references. The main text discusses the Christian church's practice of taking the body and blood of Christ, which is said to be a part of the Christian ritual. The text mentions that this practice is part of the Christian church's belief system and is considered a secret. It also states that the Christian church's belief in the resurrection of Christ is based on this practice.

The right column contains a list of references, which are numbered and include the author's name, "Anonymous," and the date, "05/17/26 (Sat) 12:42:22." The list is not fully visible in the image, but it appears to be a continuation of the text's discussion.

The image is a screenshot, and the text is in a format that is typical for Reddit posts, with a header at the top and a list of references at the bottom. The style of the image is straightforward and informative, with a focus on conveying the content of the text.

>War

Odin never participated in any wars based on what I've read. He did follow some people into battle in the form of a wolf but it seems he left once the fight began. Instead, Odin's role was more about running around and getting everyone prepared for Ragnarok; he's more a General than a Soldier.

>Death

As for the "God of Death" motif, it's easy to compare him to others commonly misunderstood as "God of Death". I really like the Osiris or Shiva comparison resultingly and partially because of the Blue Lotus and the Bhang analog with the "Meade of Poetry" Odin is famous for. Outside of that though, Odin's role is a Psychopomp. Although Odin's vicarious actions through the Valkyries remind me a little more of Thoth and the who gets to go to heaven bit, Odin oversees Valhalla and resultingly welcomes people there after dying, sort of facilitating the post-death process for them. Shiva's role is admittedly a tad more nuanced however; as he's more a pathway toward Moksha (hence transcendence of Death or the Samsara cycle). Still, the Psychopomp theme fits the same.

So, personally, I don't recognize the "God of Death" or "God of War" titles. Instead, Wotan is the God of Frenzy (Madness) or Inspiration instead. I like the Mercurial themes far more and especially on a personal level.

Okay, this crosses a line. I don't intend to defend jews or anything here, but Qlippoth exists in other systems. Cabala is far more developed than Kabbalah, to be very clear.

What's wrong with the Trickster?

Why do you guys keep shoehorning things you don't like? The Trickster is distinctly Neutral and there's no other way to receive the archetype. To be very clear, this behavior courts the Trickster's tricks. Did you not know this? If you beg him to show you how naughty he can be, he'll be a dick to you on purpose.

The good parts of Kabbalah were stolen from Neoplatonism. There's nothing unique to salvage from Kabbalah that can't be found better articulated somewhere else in our own history. People should just go to the source or use European words for these concepts rather than trying to import Hebrew phrases and Jewish imagery into European religion.

anonymous is alot like a secret society like the masons or the rosicrucians, except being more digital and open source. There is alot of bullshit writing surrounding odin. Like i rented a room from a dude who had a book on odin but it was mostly fanfic written by a bunch of wiccans, as per the publishing house. He is a powerful diety, lord of the word 'would' is pretty high tier. Odin, Wotan, Odei, Votan - a tribal diety. Jung wrote a paper on Odin and he had to rename the concept to 'the shadow' to be more palatable to the (((international) press. Wikipedia says odin is a 1000 years younger than jesus give or take but it seems like jesus quotes the rites of odin, and odei is rather old. YHVH is a tribal diety too, as is allah (allegedly and/or obviously). I like the Eloheim though. I don't think yhv=demiurg though, I did when i was newer into gnosticism they all emanate further out from the monad.

In the center of the image, there is a photograph of a man wearing glasses and a blue shirt. He appears to be speaking or presenting, as indicated by his hand gesture. The man is facing the camera and is slightly turned to the left.

The overall style of the image is promotional and seems to be related to a news or event announcement. The text and the photograph suggest that the man is a prominent figure, possibly a speaker or a key figure in the event being discussed. The text is bold and the photograph is clear, making it easy to read and understand the message.

Time traveling humans came back in time to stop the nuclear war, because the majority of the cannibal reptilians are dead and we replaced all of their children.

But stupid fuckers keep spawning thinking that they can do anything that they want to do, because they see themselves as more than other humans, and then they use and manipulate others to generate personal gain at the expense of others meanwhile they pay nothing back to others while thinking that everyone has to serve them.

This is why we have pedophiles, because they want to spread evil into another person through a personal informational exchange through the information of their sperm, and the cell walls of a girls vagina, thus leading to the perversion of innocent people.

The bottom right photo is a black and white photo of a large, circular room with a high ceiling. The room has a white, ornate ceiling with a series of circular patterns. The walls of the room are also white, and there is a large, ornate chandelier hanging from the ceiling. The room is empty, and there are no people visible in the photo.

In the center of the collage, there is text that reads "Salle d'audiences papale Paul VI." This suggests that the image is related to a Papal Audience Hall, which is a venue for papal audiences and events. The text is in a bold, capitalized font, which stands out against the monochrome background of the other photographs.

The image is a text excerpt from a book or article, likely from the 1920s, as indicated by the date "17th June 1923" at the top of the page. The text is in English and discusses the concept of anthropomorphism, which is the attribution of human qualities to non-human entities. The author, Rudolf Steiner, is mentioned as the one who first introduced the concept of anthropomorphism.

The text is divided into two main sections. The first section discusses the concept of anthropomorphism and its implications, while the second section delves into the philosophical and theological aspects of the concept. The text is written in a formal and academic style, with references to various works and authors, such as Vasilii Solovyov, Pavel Florovsky, and Sergei Bulgakov.

The text is structured in a way that follows a logical flow, starting with the introduction of the concept of anthropomorphism and its implications, followed by a discussion of the philosophical and theological aspects of the concept, and finally, a conclusion that ties the discussion back to the question of the existence of a mysterious being named Sophia within the context of the spiritual.

The visual clues in the image, such as the text formatting, the use of quotation marks, and the reference to works by other authors, support the conclusion that this is a scholarly or academic text. The text is dense with information, and the use of italics and bold typeface for emphasis further indicates its formal nature.

The person's face is the central focus of the image, with a light-colored background that suggests a textured surface, possibly paper or parchment. The person's eyes are wide open, and the eyebrows are slightly arched, giving the face a somewhat serious expression. The hair is depicted in a flowing manner, and the person's hair color is not specified. The image has a warm tone, with a slight sepia or brownish tint, which gives it an aged or historical feel. There are no visible texts or discernible brands within the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of traditional portraiture, often found in religious or historical artworks.

>No mention of Maria Valtorta's "The Poem of The Man-God" (AKA The Gospel as Revealed to Me) depicting the life of Jesus Christ >labeled forbidden by the Vatican, considered as a work of fiction... yet strangely allowed to be published instead of being shutdown

>The author -despite being an average educated woman, bedridden for life and with no knowledge of the outside world- described ancient authentic Jewish rituals, towns, customs, astral maps and locations only archeologists know. Thanks to her they discovered where Lazarus' mansion was for example

>Lorenzo Ferri, who was at the time the one in charge of the Holy Shroud research got precise info on Jesus' face and wounds and there is a museum with his name in Italy with most of his paintings, illustrations and sculptures according to Valtorta's instructions

The image is a religious iconographic representation, likely depicting a saint or a religious figure. The central figure is a bearded man with a long beard and a bald head, wearing a white robe with red and black geometric patterns. He is holding a book with a red cover and a white spine, which has a pattern of black and white dots. Above the figure, there is a halo-like outline, and the figure is surrounded by a red border with a golden outline. The background is a golden-yellow color with a red border.

The text surrounding the figure is in a script that appears to be in a non-Latin script, possibly Greek or another Eastern language. The text includes the letters "ΠΡΟΦΟΥ" and "ΠΡΟΦΟΥ" in a larger font size, which could be a title or a name, and "ΠΡΟΦΟΥ" in a smaller font size. The style of the image is traditional and appears to be a representation of a religious icon, commonly found in Christian art.

Guys

What do you make out of all the Early Church (first five centuries or so) heresy/orthodoxy nonsense. Gnosticism, arrianism, modalism etc like, perhaps gnosticism vs orthodoxy was the most substantial and consequential but overall it just reads to me like the most educated men of their time fighting each other to death even and with politics involved over mostly just semantics.

Doesn't sit right, there must be something else to it. Like it's foundational for some esoteric stuff, systems of magic or whatever behind the scenes.

The text is written in English and appears to be a discussion or analysis of a biblical verse, specifically Matthew 22:23, which is missing a verse. The author is discussing the process of searching for the missing verse and the importance of checking for oneself. The text includes references to other verses, such as the Old Testament, and mentions the use of a concordance to find the missing verse. The author also refers to the concept of the "living Bible" and the "King James version," indicating that they are discussing the differences between these two versions of the Bible.

The visual clues in the image include the text itself, which is in a standard font and appears to be a paragraph, and the background is a light beige color, which is typical for informational or academic documents. There are no images or graphics present in the image. The text is centered and appears to be a single page, suggesting that the document is a single piece of writing.

That's the entirely wrong question to ask someone with depression/anxiety, because the answer changes based on the day. When I get an idea or feel inspired, that day I usually have no doubts. When I'm struggling, nothing BUT doubts. I mean, I had doubts about returning to church and finding faith in Christ, at least at first. I have doubts that God could ever give me the tools or ability to accomplish anything, not because He's incapable, but because I'm such a retard. I told God I'd do anything He asked of me but now I feel like He's never asked anything of me because He knows I'm not capable, and what I thought was divine inspiration was me being a fool. Other days I wonder if I haven't accomplished anything yet because it'll happen on His time, but sometimes I think nothing's happened because I'm a 40 year old man and it's too late for me to learn anything.

The text is written in a formal and academic style, with a mix of paragraphs and sentences.

The text discusses the concept of participation, which is central to the document. It mentions the historical context of participation in the Church Fathers and the Scholastics, and how understanding human knowledge as a participation in divine knowledge is a key aspect of the Christian tradition. The text also touches on the concept of participation in the divine, which is not just about the perfect, but also about the perfecting of the divine.

The text also discusses the concept of participation in the divine, which is not just about the perfect, but also about the perfecting of the divine. It mentions the medieval doctrine of the transcendent complete the picture, being, truth, goodness, and beauty as concretions of what is true, good, and ultimately divine. It also discusses the idea of participation in the divine as a way to be enlightened, to be enlightened about the divine, and to be enlightened about something other to God.

The text concludes with a statement that the enlightened's separation of fact and virtue is not progress, it is a mistake. The text ends with a quote from the Enlightenment's suggesting an outdoor setting with a natural, possibly rocky, texture. The lighting in the image casts shadows on the statue, adding depth and contrast to the scene. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is a close-up photograph with a focus on the details of the statue and its adornments.

The figure is depicted in a dynamic pose, with one arm raised and the other bent at the elbow, as if in the midst of action. The statue is adorned with a variety of beads, including blue and gold ones, which are strung together in a necklace-like fashion. The background is blurred,

The image is a photograph of a black and white cat sitting on a wooden floor. The cat is looking directly at the camera with its eyes wide open. It has a white chest and paws, and its fur is predominantly black with white markings on its face and paws. The cat is positioned under a transparent chair with a clear backrest and legs, which is partially visible in the frame. The background is out of focus, but it appears to be an indoor setting with a light-colored floor and a white wall. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is candid and seems to capture a spontaneous moment.

The image depicts a dimly lit, rustic setting with a focus on a wooden stick that appears to be a makeshift candle holder. The stick is vertically oriented and has a red ribbon tied around its top, suggesting it might be used for lighting candles. To the left of the stick, there is a clear glass with a candle inside, casting a soft glow. The glass is positioned in such a way that the flame of the candle is visible, indicating that the candle is lit. The background is a rough-textured wall with a rough-cut texture, and there is a faint light source, possibly a candle or a lantern, illuminating the scene. The overall atmosphere of the image is one of quiet intimacy and simplicity.

The image shows a collection of three cards with illustrations of religious figures, placed on a surface with a blue background speckled with white dots. The cards feature a mix of religious symbols and depictions of figures, including a skull, a cross, and a figure with a long hair and a robe. The style of the illustrations is reminiscent of traditional woodcut prints, with a monochromatic color scheme and a focus on the figures' facial features. The cards are arranged in a way that they overlap slightly, with the top card slightly tilted to the right. The overall impression is of a collection of religious cards, possibly for a ritual or a spiritual practice.

The image is a screenshot of a Twitter conversation, specifically a tweet from the user "@duelos_33". The tweet is a response to a question posed by another user, "@duelos_33", who is asking about the perspective of a Christian who reads Evelo. The user "@duelos_33" is expressing their own perspective on the matter, stating that they are Orthodox Christian and they still consider themselves one. They also mention that they have some correspondence with Evelo's ideas and that they are doubting the foundations of the Christian faith after reading him.

The tweet is a response to a question about the impact of Evelo's writings on the Christian perspective. The user "@duelos_33" is asking how the writings of Evelo have affected their own understanding of Christianity. The tweet includes a list of responses to this question, with the first response being "No he didn't cause I think he doesn't understand Christ." The second response is "His critics are Christians are interesting and that is the basis of modernity, and that it is a Christian perspective that is being attacked." The third response is "But this is the Church's aspect that someone can attack. When it comes to Christ, Evelo doesn't understand shit." The fourth response is "Evelo thinks Christ is basically the opposite of a solar god and a deity working towards heroic values. But Christ is every bit of this and more. His sacrifice is the embodiment of sovereignty and him never surrendering in front of the enemy. He is the embodiment of the divine and the divine is the embodiment of the divine. He gave a model to follow as a heroic model using to sacrifice everything for those He loves." The fifth response is "Such noble character is what led to the creation of a neighborhood that Evelo speaks favourably about, not realizing that it is a Christian already in Christ." The sixth response is "Very interesting insight. Although, I'm pretty sure he saw knighthood as a continuation of ancient Germanic warrior culture, not Christianity." The seventh response is "My impression is that Julius Evelo never really gave Christianity any serious consideration, but he had to react to the Christian worldview. He was a man

The image is a dark-colored photograph with a white background. It contains text in a serif font, which is predominantly blue and white. The text is divided into two columns, with the left column being in a larger font size and the right column being in a smaller font size. The text discusses the historical context of Christianity in relation to the Roman Empire, particularly focusing on the influence of Christianity on the Roman Empire's religious practices.

The text begins with a statement that highlights the advantage of the universalist tendencies of the Roman Empire for Christianity, which allowed for the spread of the Christian faith. It then mentions that Christianity gradually declined in the Roman Empire due to the influence of the Roman Catholic Church, which was more concerned with maintaining its own power and prestige. The text then discusses the concept of "Christianity" as a "converted" Western man, which is contrasted with the "converted" Eastern man. The text also mentions that Christianity was not about a "practical paganism" but rather a "mystical and cultural mish-mash" that was a result of a "mutual stalling."

The text concludes by stating that the "warrior-races of Europe" were not about "beat their swords into plowshares" but rather about "beating their swords into plowshares" and that the "link to the sacred had been appropriated by the Catholic Church." The text concludes with a reference to the "unacknowledged compromise" through which Christianity, despite its more peaceful name, slowly evolved into a more aggressive and warlike phenomenon that perhaps better suited the more volatile sensitivities of the Europeans themselves.

The image does not contain any images or graphics, and the text is the primary focus. The style of the image is informative and academic, with a focus on historical context and religious influence.

presented in a dark background with a lighter blue highlight, which draws attention to the text's content.

The text is divided into two main sections. The first section, titled "Ironically," begins with the statement "Evelo admits that the entry of Christianity into the West enabled the Roman idea to rise to 'new heights.'" This suggests a historical context where Christianity's entry into the West was a catalyst for the rise of the Roman Empire.

The second section, titled "The Byzantine Imperial Idea," continues the historical narrative by discussing the concept of the Byzantine Empire as a "high degree of traditional spirit," which is contrasted with the "Western Catholicism and Eastern Orthodox." This section emphasizes the unique characteristics of the Byzantine Empire, such as its emphasis on tradition and its role as a "traditional spirit" in contrast to the "Western Catholicism and Eastern Orthodox."

The text also includes a citation, "(p. 288)," which indicates that the information is from a specific source or work. The text concludes with a statement that "however, although Evelo can recognise within the Orthodox Church the traces of tradition he is fully aware that such matters were being advanced by people of an Eastern European background," suggesting a broader cultural and historical context beyond the Orthodox Church.

The image is a screenshot, which means it is a digital image of a printed page, and it is a screenshot of a text that is likely from a book or article. The text is in English, and the style of the image is typical of academic or scholarly publications, with a focus on clarity and readability.

The image is a screenshot of a text, likely from a digital publication or article, with a dark background and white text. The text is divided into two main sections. The first section, in a larger font size, provides a historical context about the Italian belief that the Christian tradition found expression through Western Catholicism. It mentions the success of employing three main strategies: the recitation of various extremist features of primitive Christianity, the organization of a ritual, dogmatic, and symbolic corpus beyond the mere mystical, a soteriological element, and the absorption and adaptation of doctrinal and organizational elements that were borrowed from the Roman world and from classical civilization in general.

The second section, in a smaller font size, provides a contrasting perspective on Catholicism, stating that although it is not "Traditional" in the way that thinkers such as Evelo, Gu  non or Sch  nemann employ the term, it nonetheless contains "Traditional" characteristics due to its cautious use of pre-Christian features. The text concludes with a quote from the text, which reads: "Although Catholicism is not 'Traditional' in the way that thinkers such as Evelo, Gu  non or Sch  nemann employ the term, it nonetheless contains 'Traditional' characteristics due to its cautious use of pre-Christian features."

It also came to regard the ruler as a mere layman equal to all other men before God and his Church, and a mere official invested by mortal beings with the power to rule over others in accordance with natural law, (pp. 289-90)."

The text appears to be discussing a philosophical or theological concept, as indicated by the use of the word "analogy" and the mention of "the principle that decides what the body will do." The image is a screenshot of a text, likely from a book or article, discussing the historical context of the Gēllinists' attempts to bring the political realm under the control of the Church. The text is in English and is divided into paragraphs, with the first paragraph beginning with "I." The text is formatted in a standard font, and the background is a dark color, which contrasts with the white text, making it easy to read. The text discusses the Roman idea of reviving the ancient "gypsy" or "Roman" idea, which was a direct North-origin migration into the area of Roman civilization. The Germanic element was determined to defend the imperial idea against the Church and restore to new life the formative vés of the ancient Roman world. This is how the Holy Roman Empire and the feudal civilization arose, both of which represented the two last great traditional manifestations the West ever knew.

The text also mentions the Germanic stock who were so determined to wrestle political control from the Church, and the barbarian remnants of the old "Artic" and "North-Germanic" nations who were the representatives of the Germanic principle in its warrior aspect. The god Darmar-Thor was the slayer of Thrym and the god of the thunder-force, and the double hammer Mjōllnir was both a variation of the symbolic "Hyperborean battle-axe" and a sign of the thunder-force.

The text also discusses the Gēllinists' frequent use of the "race of the spirit," which is often linked to the Gēllinists' spiritual authority. The text mentions that while the Gēllinists were literally pumping with the mystical blood of those described in the Edda and thus compared to the priests of an imported religion centered on a degenerated "Apodistic" spirituality, their claim to a more sacred authority seems just.

The image is a snapshot of a text, and the text is a part of a larger narrative or discussion, likely from a scholarly or historical work. The text is dense with information, and the formatting and structure suggest that it is a part of a larger document or article. The text is in English, and the style of the text is formal and academic, which is typical for scholarly or historical texts.

The image is a text excerpt from a book or article, presented in a dark blue background with a white line dividing the text into two columns. The text is in English and discusses the historical context of the Roman Empire, specifically focusing on the influence of Roman imperialism and Christianity on the development of the Roman stock.

The text begins by mentioning the case of the invading German tribes under the direction of Alaric (410-418), which led to the construction of the Roman Empire. It then discusses the idea of Roman universalism and the Christian principle, which was a general aspect of affirmation of a supernatural order. The text mentions the creation of the highest Nordic-Germanic stocks, which contributed to the integration of ideas on a higher plane and the revitalization of a new form of what had often been materialized and particularized in the context of traditional races.

The text then delves into the concept of conversion, which was a more powerful and prepared tool for a revival of the imperial Roman idea. It mentions the example of a pope who would prostrate himself before the emperor, which was a clear indication that the Catholic priesthood was subservient. The text also discusses the feudal system, which was designed to express fidelity to the Emperor, and the fact that it allowed each individual to find his or her true nature.

The text concludes by discussing the last time in Western history when the quadripatriarch of society into serfs, merchant, warrior nobility, and representatives of spiritual authority, the clergy in the Guelph and the ascetic, Knightly orders in the Childebrune system, took form and affirmed itself in an almost spontaneous way. The text ends with the reference to the book "For the last time in Western history the quadripatriarch of society into serfs, merchant, warrior nobility, and representatives of spiritual authority, the clergy in the Guelph and the ascetic, Knightly orders in the Childebrune system, took form and affirmed itself in an almost spontaneous way." (p.296).

The image is a snapshot of a scholarly discussion, likely from a book or article, and it is important to note that the text is in English and the image is in black and white. The text is structured in a way that follows a logical flow, with each paragraph beginning with a colon and ending with a period, which is typical of academic or scholarly writing. The text is dense with information, and the use of italics and bold typeface for emphasis helps to highlight key points and concepts.

The image is a screenshot of a text, likely from a scholarly article or book, discussing the concept of the "Ghibelline fusion" between the imperial and the universal in the medieval period. The text is presented in a dark background with a white font, and the text is divided into two columns. The first column is in a larger font size and is titled "I have previously suggested that in the medieval imperial legend there are numerous elements that refer more or less directly to the idea of the supreme 'centre'—these elements, through various symbols, allude to a mysterious relationship between this centre and the universal authority and legitimacy of the Ghibelline emperor. The objects symbolizing intrinsic regality were entrusted to him and at times the motif of the hero. Who never died, and who had been brought to a mountain? or to a subterranean seat was applied to him. (p. 297-8.)"

The second column is smaller and contains a quote from the text, which reads:

"Emerging from this display of authority was the intense spirit of chivalry that we examined in Part 13. Ethics, morals, call them what you like—the knights had developed a system of values—much of it centred on the Grail mythos—that added a decidedly martial flavour to the more submissive and egalitarian nature of Christianity." The image is a screenshot, which means it is a digital image of a printed page, and it is not a photograph. The text is in English, and the style of the image is academic and formal, typical of scholarly articles or books. The text discusses historical and philosophical concepts, and the image is used to illustrate the content of the text.

The image is a screenshot of a text, likely from a digital publication or a webpage, with a dark background and white text. The text is in English and discusses the historical context of the Church's involvement in the Crusades and the role of Catholicism in the conflict. It mentions the reasons behind the Church's involvement, such as the desire to control the Church and the Church's role in the Crusades, and the eventual decline of the Church's influence. The text also references the impact of the Crusades on the Church's power and the eventual decline of the Church's influence.

The text is divided into two main sections. The first section, in a larger font size, discusses the reasons behind the Church's involvement in the Crusades and the role of Catholicism in the conflict. The second section, in a smaller font size, provides a historical context for the Church's involvement in the Crusades and the decline of its influence.

The text is structured in a way that guides the reader through the historical context of the Church's involvement in the Crusades and the decline of its influence. The use of headings and subheadings helps to organize the information and make it easier to follow the narrative. The text is clear and legible, with no visible errors or typos. The overall style of the image is informative and academic, typical of a scholarly or academic publication.

The image is a photograph of a book cover with a dark background and a golden-brown hue. The title of the book is "The Spirit and Suffering in Luke-Acts" and is written in a serif font. Below the title, there is a subtitle that reads "Charismatic Theology: Theurgy means divine wisdom, and the term wisdom (Sophia) is found only four times in the book of Luke-Acts." The author's name, "B. Clark," is printed at the bottom of the cover. On the left side of the image, there is a bronze-colored bust of Jesus Christ, which appears to be a representation of the figure from the New Testament. The bust is positioned in a way that it is facing the right side of the image, with its head turned slightly to the left.

The right side of the image features a text block with a mix of paragraphs and quotes. The text is in a serif font and is written in English. The quotes are attributed to various authors, including "B. Clark," "B. Clark," and "B. Clark." The text discusses the concept of charismatic theology, the Holy Spirit, and the role of divine wisdom in the context of the book of Luke-Acts.

The overall style of the image is academic and scholarly, with a focus on the content of the book and the author's name. The use of the bust of Jesus Christ as a decorative element adds a touch of religious symbolism to the image.

>Arabs had no knowledge of pre-existence, it's a Platonic-Christian concept adopted, probably after the sixth Imam, as the Zaydis seem to have no knowledge of this
It's a very well known Eastern concept and if the Arabs really "borrowed" the doctrine then they very likely got it, like the Greeks would have, from the East. However, any traditional doctrine is transmitted orally for many generations before it is first recorded in writing, so the order in which extant texts appears does not prove a chain of transmission by itself. Plagiarism and originality are not concepts in antiquity, rather, the more ancient the teaching, the closer to primordial truth it was considered. There would be stronger reasons to invoke the authority of the "wise barbarians," who the native tradition would assert to be its remote ancestors, than to conceal it. The sufis themselves say that their metaphysics was disclosed through direct experience, which agrees with the testimony both of the Platonists who they allegedly plagiarized and the Eastern rishis. Why is this to be denied?

You said that it's a Platonic-Christian concept. Would that not be plagiarism?

If the Zaydis do not appear to have a given doctrine, that does not mean that they really do not have it; if they really do not have it now, it does not mean that they never had it; if it was not written down in the past, that does not mean that it was not transmitted. The content of the doctrine is the spiritual influence directly experienced by the believer and not the form it takes. In theological terms: the virtue of faith and the deposit of faith are distinct.

>The super-existential trinity reveals itself in being

Super-existence is not pre-existence. In the latter the pre-existent being is not manifested at one time, and then at another time it is. The Trinity is the very principle of manifestation and is in all things at all times. It's not comparable to the pre-existence of the Prophet. Rather to "whithersoever you turn, there is the face of God."

The image is a book cover with a predominantly beige background. At the top of the cover, the title "Seal of the Saints" is written in a serif font. Below the title, the subtitle "Prophethood and Sainthood in the Doctrine of Ibn Arabi" is written in a smaller serif font. The author's name, "Michele Chodkiewicz," is displayed in a smaller serif font at the bottom of the cover.

The central part of the cover features a decorative tile design. The design is symmetrical and consists of a blue background with a white border. Within this border, there are three arches with intricate patterns and designs. The arches are interconnected by a series of blue and white floral motifs. The central arch is larger and has a central medallion with a blue and white design, which appears to be a representation of a person or a figure. The arches are arranged in a triangular formation, with the central arch being the largest and the two smaller arches flanking it on either side.

The overall style of the image is traditional, with a focus on the decorative elements of the tile design. The cover does not contain any other discernible text or graphics.

>The Muhammadan revelation is explicitly viewed as the confirmation and fulfillment of the revelations preceding it (musaddiqn bi-ma bayna yadayhi, Qur'an 46:30): according to the Qur'an (2:4, 2:136, etc.), the true believers are those who believe in what was revealed to Muhammad and in what was revealed before him. The concept of the verus propheta, symbolized by the long pilgrimage of the Muhammadan Light through the aeons, is a logical consequence of this fundamental doctrine, according to which the successive prophetic messages, as multiple manifestations of the one Truth, are so many stages leading up to him who will bring the 'full sum of the Words' (jawami al-kalim), simultaneously perfecting and abrogating the previous Laws.

You have read Plato but haven't understood him, if you still think that your opinions constitute knowledge. What you really know, you know without knowing how you know. Such is pre-existence, known by anamnesis.

>Please read Saint Albertus Magnus where the the light is the first creation of God as a mixture of limit and unlimited Point me to the text and I gladly will.

According to Sahl al-Tustari, Khidr said to him, "God created the Light of Muhammad out of His own Light."

Genesis 1:3: "And God said: Be light made. And light was made."

But in John 1:1-9:

1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

2 The same was in the beginning with God.

3 All things were made by him: and without him was made nothing that was made.

4 In him was life, and the life was the light of men.

5 And the light shineth in darkness, and the darkness did not comprehend it.

6 There was a man sent from God, whose name was John.

7 This man came for a witness, to give testimony of the light, that all men might believe through him.

8 He was not the light, but was to give testimony of the light.

9 That was the true light, which enlighteneth every man that cometh into this world.

Been following more on that Emerald Tablet book, focusing on the first step in alchemy: Calcination. It recommended a practice known as roasting cinnabar meditation. While practicing this, I discovered the weakness in my ego relates to my habits of inaction. That I am afraid to stand up for myself with regards to work, and that I further tend to avoid working many hours to avoid discomfort. That my actions in general are guided by an avoidance of discomfort to my own detriment.

This analysis by my own anima/spirit cuts deep, although it doesn't line up with my traditional preconceptions of what "ego" is. Nevertheless, I am told that *this* is the element of my ego that must be burned away to continue in this alchemical, spiritual purification. I hesitated for a long while to accept that this is something I will go through with, and I am still struggle to want to push myself forward here.

Any thoughts/spiritual advice here?

that reads "Early Influences." The document is written in English and is divided into two main sections. The first section, titled "Early Influences," lists several historical figures and events that are associated with the development of Gnosticism. These include the "The Centurions," "The Rosicrucians," and "Gnosticism in modern pop culture."

The second section, titled "Early Influences," continues the list of historical figures and events, but this time it is titled "The Teaching of the Gnostics." It lists the "Jesus," "Zeus," and "Luciferian." The text explains that the teaching of the Gnostics resulted in punishment, with "Zeus punishing the Gnostics for their heresy." The document also mentions that the Gnostics considered themselves to be the "Son of the Creator," and that they believed that Luciferianism was a thought that Jesus brought about.

The document is presented in a simple, straightforward layout with a clear separation between the two sections, making it easy to read and understand. The text is in a standard font, and the document is in portrait orientation. The overall style of the image is informational and academic, designed to provide a concise overview of the historical context and development of Gnosticism.

The left column is a block of text, while the right column is a series of paragraphs. The text discusses the concept of Gnosticism and its relationship to Christianity, suggesting that both systems could be viewed as part of the same "illusion" or "deception." The text emphasizes the Gnostic path's desire to transcend the material world and the desire to control the material world, but it also notes that this path leads to a state of being trapped in the material world, where the Gnostic goal is to transcend both the materialism and the masses' religious subjugation. The text concludes with a statement about the Gnostic goal of breaking free from the illusion of duality and returning to the "Plenum," which is the realm of divine unity. The image is a combination of text and illustration, with the text providing the narrative and the illustration depicting a scene of a battle between two figures, one with wings and the other with a demonic appearance.

you are thinking in terms where it needs to be spelled outright that we are slaves in a prison realm for it to be classified as a gnostic movie, but beyond the surface level of handholding when it comes to the plot, its obvious that these movies employ gnostic symbolism where they turn the demiurge into the villian

Palpatine is the Demiurge. He funds foreign nations(the federation) to destroy israel (the republic). That's basically what Yahweh did through history as well, he used foreign assets to punish israel for it's transgressions Anakin aka Vader is Jesus. Not the gnostic false Jesus but the real one. He was born of a virgin and he is the chosen one, the messiah.

He chose to side with Palpatine because the Jedi (jews) were corrupt and because through being true to Palpatine he could save his loved ones and to prevent death. The light and dark side are obviously inverted, the bible speaks of this and that people will change light for darkness.

LOTR

the ring is the cross, Sauron is Jesus

Mordor represents what Chirst will do in the last days to the Earth, he will scorch everything and he will rule with a rod of iron, subjugating all the nations.

The pursuit to destroy the ring(cross) aims to destroy the faith of his servants who posses the lesser rings, those who are the part of the elect.

Note that the villians in these movies all have eyes of flames, a characteristic of Jesus. The fire nation in avatar represents the last days too, when Christ suddenly attacks like a thief in the night.

The Avatar is some ascendent master reincarnation gnostic who thinks he can overcome the Fire Lord through his knowledge and esoteric wisdom.

I still say you have the tranny brain damage (ring = cross is a bizarre connection to make), but it is the case that the Jesus of revelations has a little too much common with an arch movie villain. But I wouldn't say this is a side effect of the writers being all part of a nefarious plot to promote Gnosticism. It's just that burning everything down and being a brutal dictator goes against the common-sense morality of most civilized people. And, for the purpose of writing of a good action/adventure story, they also make for a formidable opponent.

its not as bizarre if you take into account what the cross or the ring represent in the first place.

They are objects which act as the founding principle of Christ/Sauron's ministry and potray the soul of the movement.

Their followers are called to carry them at all cost.

Big reason why the movie potrayed the struggle of Frodo and his desire to cling to the ring was precisely to create this tension and a feeling of shame to the idea of clinging to true power, which is what the cross also represents, the cross will make you invinsible in the eyes of the world, once you take up your gross, you are no longer in the domain of this world, for the world becomes a corpse to you.

Something cool (or i guess unintentional) which the movie made, was that when Frodo met the nazgul with his ring on, the Nazgul were potrayed as angels of light, contrary to how the world sees them as demons of darkness. The ring shifts your perspective and shows you the truth, which is why it had to be destroyed through the eyes of the ascended gnostic master Gandalf

So classical theism and ordinary Christianity contradict reality. But I'm not sure you can import that model of God onto the Gnostic Monad. The apocryphon of John says that "all it sees is its own perfect light" (which could be contrary to omniscience as commonly understood) and "The One is majesty and total purity, eternity that grants eternity, life that grants life, blessedness that grants blessedness, gnosis that grants gnosis, goodness that grants goodness, mercy that grants mercy, grace that grants grace. *But the One does not have any of these things*. Rather, what it has to give is inexhaustible, inextinguishable light." which could be contrary to omnibenevolence as commonly understood. And further, although in some sense, "The One has all power. Nothing rules over it," at the same time, "Its peace, its silence, its rest cannot be disturbed," which kind of precludes intentional action on its part, which doesn't fit with the normal idea of omnipotence. And even if you work out a formal description of the Monad that seems to be in keeping with its supposed characteristics that lets you arrive at a contradiction, the value of that is questionable, because the Monad is "ineffable, because no one has ever understood it well enough to describe it." So the legitimacy of the author's attempt at describing it is preemptively negated by himself.

The question why non-duality "gave birth" to duality is a mystery that can't be understood by a conventional mind.

Non-duality is not someone or something, so it has no intention and doesn't "do" anything. If you call this God is might lead to misunderstandings. (The Buddha called it emptiness (shunyata) to avoid this problem.)

>contradicts the gnostic narrative because it still managed to create evil

I suspect that from the Monad's perspective, evil doesn't exist, hence "all it sees is its own perfect light."

Philip 6

Light and darkness, life and death, and right and left are conjoined twins. Therefore the good are not good, the bad are not bad, life is not life, and death is not death. Each disintegrates into that from which it came. But that which is superior to the world does not disintegrate, for it is eternal.

And to the extent that evil exists, it exists as an absence. From Philip 104, "The root of all evil is the lack of gnosis." In the gospel of truth the situation is compared to a nightmare, which, when you wake up, you realize was nothing. The way I've been thinking about it recently is that it's like the aeons are thoughts in God's mind, and some of those thoughts have thoughts. Sophia is one of the thoughts who had a thought while trying to comprehend the monad, and we are thoughts in Sophia's mind following on that, as she dreams. So in one way we as thoughts can be harmed, but on the level of the monad nothing bad is happening except thoughts thinking thoughts. But we will inevitably wake up.

Evil exists on our level and on the demiurge's level, but not on God's level, is how I'm thinking about it. It's an emergent property.

>when you suffer that suffering strikes the very core of your being. you cannot be tricked into believing you are suffering

I agree with this, but I consider it to be possible to think of suffering as an emergent property as well, one that depends on something we're continuously doing. I imagine the Gnostic perspective on this could be similar to the Buddhist perspective, where although the problem of suffering is at the core of the religion, so is the promise that it's possible to be free from suffering with a change of perspective, through mystical insight into nirvana and the not-self nature of the five aggregates. Of course I don't claim to be enlightened, so I haven't proven that to myself.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a close-up of a classical bust of a bearded man with a long beard and a receding hairline. The man appears to be a figure of historical significance, possibly a philosopher or a statesman, given the context of the quote. The quote is written in white text on a black background, and it reads:

"Is God willing to prevent evil, but not able?

Then he is not omnipotent;

Is he able, but not willing?

Then he is malevolent;

Is he both able and willing?

Then whence cometh evil?

Is he neither able nor willing?

Then why call him God?"

The quote is attributed to Epictetus, as indicated by the signature at the bottom of the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a historical photograph, with a focus on the bust and the quote, which suggests a theme of philosophical reflection or contemplation.

The central challenge of theology imo is to come up with a fundamentally optimistic cosmology and understanding of the ground of being while still acknowledging that at a glance (even a very long glance) life is pretty awful and out of control. To me Gnosticism or something resembling it looks like it has more potential to do that than anything else, though I haven't settled on a full working model of it in my head. In fact I'm encouraged by the idea that it isn't something you can create a satisfactory model for. The next best option for me is just atheism, which imo should be the default given most of the available evidence. So Gnosticism is my aspirational belief, while atheism is my realistic suspicion.

Maybe it's important that we have room to demonstrate virtue ourselves as part of waking up, while if we were handed the comfy life we would have fewer opportunities to demonstrate virtue. But now that's starting to sound annoyingly like normal theistic defenses of the problem of evil.

I recently learned about the Stoic idea that "Virtue is the only good for mankind." And for some reason it goes really hard even though it seems obviously wrong. (Chocolate cake is pretty good too if you ask me.)

The image is a stylized illustration of a character from a card game, specifically the "Joker" card. The character is depicted in a dark, menacing pose with a large, menacing grin. The character's face is detailed with a large, dark, and somewhat menacing eye, and a large, dark, and somewhat menacing mouth. The character's hair is dark and appears to be styled in a way that suggests a wild, unkempt appearance. The character's skin is a dark, possibly grayish tone, and the character's eyes are not visible.

The background of the image is a light, almost white, color with a subtle pattern that includes swirls and lines, giving the impression of a chaotic or swirling environment. The character's head is centrally placed in the image, with the text "Joker" written in bold, capitalized letters in the upper left corner. Below the character's head, there is a quote attributed to René Descartes, which reads, "Evil: Demon. Eternally. As clever and deceitful as he is powerful, this demon has directed his entire effort to misleading time." The style of the image is reminiscent of a comic book or graphic novel illustration, with a focus on the character's menacing expression and the accompanying text. The image is designed to convey a sense of danger and mystery, fitting for the "Joker" character from the game.

gonsis, something you never experienced im betting, but I will give you a more logical reason seeing how your retarded.

Ok first what would be "Evil" in a world view that overarching god is evil, as classical theology understands Evil to be the absence of good as god is the source of "good", so we will just invert it so that good is the absence of evil.

So Evil is the substance and good is just a lack of that substance, so god is evil and goodness is a privation of god.

This god would not create anything, as Being is understood to be an act of good under an theological reasoning, so god in its goodness and his nature would naturally gives being, this also means that this god wouldn't exist. so its literarily an impossibility if we are going to be consistent under theological understanding.

But lets not grant classical theology for a moment, lets say an overarching evil god exists, the moment you grant that you now fall into Descartes's devil demon scenario; if there was an all evil all super powerful being, you would and could be under deception. so every single thing you think which would be true, would be a product of some sort of an divine deception. this now totally destroys justification and truth. So knowledge now becomes a literal impossibility in this world view. every single reason you might give, in why the top g god could be evil and there is not any higher good, would be invalid.

So in conclusion, not only would that gods existence make knowledge and reasoning impossible, and therefore you couldn't claim it exists.

It is also invalid under classical theological reasoning, as it makes creation impossible so you wouldn't exist and itself wouldn't even exist XD.

"Since, therefore, there was nothing no matter, no substance, no non-substance, nothing simple, nothing composite, nothing non-composite, nothing unperceivable, no man, no angel, no god... the non-existent God (ouk on theos) willed, without intelligence, without perception, without will, without choice... to make a world." Anytime you're confronted with error in your world, just put your focus on god(or what I call the infinite) instead. That's it. It's the most fundamental and universal form of spiritual practice, and learning how to do this is likely the ENTIRE point of being in this particular looping matrix realm. Ok im back,

Your crude interpretation of Basilides, which is just wrong, here are some scholarly responses to his conceptual idea of "Non-Existence"

G.R.S. Mead in

>Fragments of a Faith Forgotten

Argues that Basilides' "Non-Existence" is actually "Super-Existence," a state so full that it cannot be described by the limits of "is."

Birger A. Pearson in >Ancient Gnosticism

Highlights Basilides as a pioneer of Apophatic Theology (Negative Theology), where God is defined by what He is not.

Hans Jonas in

>The Gnostic Religion

Explains that for Basilides, the "Non-Existent God" represents the absolute "Otherness" that precedes the creation of the cosmos.

N.A. Dahl in

>The Neglected Factor in New Testament Studies

Discusses the Ouk On Theos (which i doubt you even know what this is) as a way to distance the Supreme Father from the lower Demiurge (the creator God).

So in most scholarly understanding (and my own personal understanding of Basilides), is completely different from your crude interpretation of Basilides

The image is a digital art piece that appears to be a screenshot from a webpage, possibly a blog or an online gallery. It features a painting of a woman in a red cloak, seated on a wooden stool with her legs crossed. The woman is holding a staff with a plant on it, and she has a serene expression. The background is dark, with smoke or mist surrounding her, giving the impression of a mystical or ethereal atmosphere. At the top of the image, there is a text that reads "Dissociative trance," which is likely a title or a description of the artwork. Below the painting, there is a text that reads "The Oracle at Delphi was famous for her divinatory trance through the ancient Mediterranean world. Oil painting: John Collier, 1891." This text provides context to the artwork, indicating that the painting is a representation of a famous Oracle from ancient Greece, and it was created by John Collier in 1891. The text is in a smaller font size compared to the main title, which is a common practice in digital art to emphasize the title or description.

Think about it like this. The realms near the monad are bathed in the constantly harmonizing light of the monad, everything is chill there. It's our hub world. But if we want to level up, we have to go into worlds like this one that are shielded from the monad's light, and thus are able to provide imperfect and inharmonious experiences(i.e. this realm is all about experiencing evil). Why? Because it gets boring having everything be perfect for you all the time. There's probably matrixes out there that are all about having epic anime battles.

The character has two large, round eyes with a black pupil, a small nose, and a slightly frowning mouth. The character's arms are crossed in front of it, and it appears to be looking directly at the viewer. The character's expression is neutral, with no visible emotion or expression. The background of the image is black, which contrasts with the character's green skin and blue shirt, making the character stand out. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. Uh, yeah dude. The mass persecution of Christians from 66AD to 70AD was a massive sacrificial ritual made in order to bring about the millennial kingdom. Thing is these references are extremely vague and could apply to any period of time in which things are uncertain. Does the Bible make specific references to nukes, or tranny's, or the internet? No it doesn't, you are making BS claims purely on vibes.

This isn't an attack on Christians specifically, only the subcategory that pulls this "end is nigh" BS, without so much as peaking at the Bible.

The image shows a firearm, specifically a handgun, resting in a black case on a wooden surface. The handgun is a light brown color and has a black grip. The case is open, revealing the firearm and its contents. To the right of the handgun, there is a box labeled "S&W" with a picture of a handgun on it. Adjacent to the box, there is a can of ammunition with a label that reads "S&W" and "100% PURE." The can is placed on a wooden surface. In the background, there is a wooden cabinet with a visible handle. The style of the image is a straightforward, real-life photograph with no apparent filters or artistic alterations.

The image is a colorful and abstract poster with a cosmic theme. At the center, there is a figure with a humanoid body, wearing a white garment with a blue star on it, standing on a platform with a grid pattern. Above the figure, there is a large, circular object with a red center and a blue rim, resembling a planet or celestial body. Surrounding the figure are various symbols and images, including a crescent moon, a star, a globe, and a cross. The background is a blend of blue and green hues, with stars and other celestial bodies scattered throughout. At the bottom of the image, there is text that reads "The Masses / Slaves!" and "Food Energy." The style of the image is artistic and surreal, with a focus on cosmic and spiritual themes.

I see. Ya know I wasn't gonna mention that most gnostics are just rebelling against mommy and daddy, but you brought that up yourself I suppose.

Anyway the only resource you need is actually fucking reading the Bible and trying to understand the underlying messages you absolute tool. It's metaphor you dipshit, and I can't understand that for you.

Here's a few bullet points though since baby needs to be spoonfed

>God is not some old dude sitting in a chair, he's a being transcendent of all such human understanding and concepts. The Bible never once even describes his appearance, and in fact (if you understand the metaphor) never establishes him as a separate being in the first place.

>Heaven is not a place of clouds, and hell is not fire and brimstone. They are both conceptual, with heaven being union with God and hell being distance.

>Sin is that thought and action which creates further distance from God. A righteous life avoids sin as to quell the ego which seeks to separate us from him.

>Jesus was the son of God and God himself in his realization that we all carry the divine spark, and can live in the will of the divine creator as part of his grace and energy.

Essentially being both God's created child, and God himself, since (if once again you understand the metaphor) there isn't actually a difference between these things.

>The gospel's teachings were meant to instill in us a certain way of living, in order to ourselves understand the divine will and grace, therefore ideally becoming one with God through experience and understanding.

>The stories of the Bible are mostly parable mixed with often exaggerated history. They're not meant to be taken too literally.

Gnostics were the idiots who couldn't understand these things, nor any of the other metaphor, and so created some fanfiction to explain why none of it made sense to their meager brains.

You and every other gnostic are just midwit contrarians.

The left column contains a list of verses, while the right column contains a series of paragraphs. The text is in a serif font, which is commonly used for formal or academic writing. The first paragraph on the left column begins with the phrase "13: I speak in the tongues of men or of angels, but do not have love, I am only a resounding gong or a clanging cymbal." This suggests a contrast between the speaker's ability to speak in various tongues and their lack of love, which is a common theme in religious texts.

The crates vary in size and are of different colors, including shades of brown and beige. The warehouse's high ceiling and metal beams are visible, and the floor is covered in a layer of dirt or dust. The lighting inside the warehouse is dim, with artificial lights illuminating the crates and casting shadows on the floor. There is a person standing in the foreground, partially obscured by the crates, and they appear to be looking towards the center of the warehouse. The overall atmosphere of the image is industrial and somewhat eerie due to the dim lighting and the solitary figure in the foreground.

This focus on good and evil is shortsighted and misses the bigger picture. Now, we know there is existence rather than nothingness, right? We could ask why is there existence rather than pure nothingness, but that's another question.

The crux of the issue is that there is no picking-and-choosing when it comes to what is allowed to exist and what isn't. Such a god would be incomplete. As it would lack the full content of possible existence. I define god to be the totality of existence. The reason this universe is so flawed is because it is just one of endless permutations of reality. Its manifestation was inevitable.

An existence of only lollipops, sunshine, and rainbows would be incomplete. An existence that includes the good, the bad, and everything in between is supreme. It's not a matter of good or bad. It's a matter of total potentiality.

A limited flawed "creator" and its personal sandbox full of imprisoned conscious shards is one volume in the endless library of potential experienced realities. It may be a fucked up reality, but any truly supreme total complete library (read:god) would have that book in stock and if it doesn't then it's limited and incomplete.

The trouble with this is that it seems to imply that there are arbitrarily many, arbitrarily horrible, arbitrarily long lasting hell realms whose manifestation is also inevitable. How do I make sure I don't end up in one of those? It doesn't seem like it should be inevitable that I will, since there should infinitely many paths of rebirth through the infinitely many possible realities which avoid rebirth in hell realms entirely.

It's an escape route from saturn worship. Aka an escape route for all abrahamic faiths, which are all branches of saturn worship.

Gnostics plant the seed of doubt that maybe the deity manipulating reality (their reality, the saturn reality) is not so benevolent.

Which he isn't, Saturn is afraid of humanity and wants to delay them out of fear of prophecy, like how he behaved in the greek mythos as Cronus.

He scams his followers with indefinitely delayed promises i.e. "live your life this way all your life or else xyz" but xyz never actually happens. You can't ask for a refund on your life because you are dead by then, that's how he cons you.

Delaying his promises to his followers indefinitely syncretizes with his cosmic struggle to delay the future indefinitely.

People around the world are getting tired of Saturn (at a subconscious level) and their souls are yearning for a way out of his bullshit.

That verse is speaking of unrighteous or sinful anger. That is, the kind of anger born from selfishness and shame. Jesus himself became angry many times during the gospel's, and taught that righteous anger is not only justified, but the morally correct feeling to have in the right circumstances. Also the word fool in this context is specifically referring to those with a lack of spiritual understanding or development, and is not just about calling people stupid. Finally, Jesus says that in regards to fellow Christians on the path towards enlightenment and union (brothers), not the random heretics speaking against the Lord. He in fact himself calls those people fools.

Here you are again though, just pretending to understand scripture like every other retarded gnostic.

If even a dumb Netflix series can't be properly adapted by professional translators, let alone a medieval translation of religious texts. Are you really looking for meaning in every phrase? Furthermore, if you know a little history and have browsed alternative sources and apocrypha, it becomes obvious to you that the Bible has always been primarily a propaganda tool and was subject to strict censorship. This becomes even more obvious if you are well-read in the theory of propaganda and mass control, which was well described in ancient Greece. Add to this the fact that, unlike in the US, where people's communication is limited to a group of like-minded believers, there are many opportunities to interact with representatives of different religions. And for an observant person, this whole mixture of beliefs, mixed with the remnants of ancient traditions, myths, and urban legends, forms a worldview in which the Bible is just one book among many. Not the most pleasant to read.

The image is a close-up photograph of a cat with a neutral expression. The cat has a light orange fur coat and its eyes are wide open, giving it a somewhat surprised or alert look. The cat's ears are perked up, and its whiskers are visible, which are white and black in color. The cat is looking directly at the camera, and its mouth is slightly open. The background of the image is blurred, but it appears to be a room with a window and a curtain. There are no discernible texts or other objects in the image. The style of the image is candid and appears to be taken in a domestic setting.

>like the advice to carefully read Spider-Man comics.

This is an absolutely nonsensical comparison. The Bible (like any holy text), is central to an entire spiritual movement and system of faith, dogma, and meaning. You are not the first person to make such an apples to oranges comparison like this, and you aren't the first to look dumb by doing so.

>Are you really looking for meaning in every phrase?

Yes. Of course. What kind of argument even is this? Obviously you would look for meaning in every phrase of a holy text containing divine knowledge. Do you actually understand how religion works?

>alternative sources and apocrypha

I would recommend you look into why most books are considered apocrypha in the first place. Additionally, the biblical canon has existed almost entirely unchanged for about 2000 years now. I'm pretty confident that the wisdom is still there, despite its use as a political tool.

>theory of propaganda and mass control,

Its use as a tool is undeniable, however this has mostly relied upon malicious interpretation and taking advantage of the ignorant. As I said above, the book itself is still valid.

>the Bible is just one book among many

This is true, yes. There are many paths to greater spiritual insight, and the Bible is absolutely one of them.

The image is a screenshot of a Bible verse section from the New International Version (NIV) of the Bible. The text is presented in a dark background with white and light-colored text, and the font is a standard, sans-serif typeface. The image is divided into two columns, with the left column containing a list of Bible verses and the right column containing a brief description of each verse.

The list of Bible verses includes:

- 1 John 3:1-2 (NIV): "We know that we are children of God and that the wrath of God is being revealed from heaven against all the godless, the ungodly, the sinful, and those who practice magic, those who love their own souls more than their Creator."

- 2 Corinthians 4:4 (NIV): "For the kingdom of God is not in word but in power. . . . I will no longer be much with men, for the rule of this world is coming. He has poured out his wrath on us."

- 1 John 2:15 (NIV): "Little children, you are from God and have overcome them, for he who is in you is greater than he who is in the world."

- 2 Corinthians 4:4 (King James Version): "For the kingdom of God is not in word but in power. . . . I will no longer be much with men, for the rule of this world is coming."

The description of each verse is brief and provides a brief overview of the content of the verse. The text is clear and legible, and the layout is organized in a way that allows for easy reading and understanding of the Bible verse content.

The image is a text excerpt from a philosophical or religious text, likely from a religious or spiritual text, as indicated by the presence of the word "Self" in the first line. The text is written in English and appears to be a part of a larger discussion or argument, as indicated by the numbered points and the context provided by the surrounding text.

The text discusses the concept of the "First as Cause" and the "First as Effect," which are philosophical terms often used in the context of the nature of reality and the relationship between cause and effect. The text seems to be discussing the difficulty of understanding the nature of reality, as it mentions that "we have to go beyond the experience of reality to the experience of the Self."

The text also touches on the concept of the "Enclosed" and the "Enclosed," which are terms often used in the philosophy of mind and consciousness. The text seems to be discussing the nature of consciousness and the relationship between the self and the world, as it mentions the "Enclosed" and the "Enclosed" as being "not that it, we have, as it were, about it, seeking the statement of an experience."

The text also discusses the concept of the "Intellectual Being" and the "Intellectual Being," which are terms often used in the philosophy of mind and consciousness. The text seems to be discussing the nature of the self and the relationship between the self and the world, as it mentions the "Intellectual Being" and the "Intellectual Being" as being "not that it, we have, as it were, about it, seeking the statement of an experience."

The text also discusses the concept of the "Universe" and the "Universe," which are terms often used in the philosophy of mind and consciousness. The text seems to be discussing the nature of the self and the relationship between the self and the world, as it mentions the "Universe" and the "Universe" as being "not that it, we have, as it were, about it, seeking the statement of an experience."

The text concludes with a statement that seems to be a philosophical or theological statement, as it mentions "the unity of the self, it cannot remain a knowing is taking account of things, that is, accounting is multiplicity, the mind, thus plunging into the number and multiplicity, departs from unity."

The text is written in a formal and academic style, with a clear structure and a focus on the philosophical or theological aspects of the text. The text is likely from a religious or spiritual text, as it discusses concepts such as the nature of reality, the self, and the relationship between the self and the world.

On the right side of the image, there is a black and white illustration of a snake with a sun-like face and a crescent moon. The snake is curled up and appears to be in a defensive or alert position.

Overlaying the image, there is a text in a bold, capitalized font that reads "ARE YA WINNING, SON?" The text is in a different font and color, making it stand out against the background.

Below the text, there is a question in a smaller, bold font that says, "I have no clue who you are or what you are talking about." The question is in a different font and color, matching the text above.

The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a play on religious iconography and a question about identity. The use of the word "WINNING" in the text could be a play on the word "winning" in the religious iconography, suggesting a humorous or ironic twist on the concept of winning.

>So, do you seriously think that you speak and understand, at the level of a native speaker, how they spoke two thousand years ago?

Modern languages aren't what they used to be, and native speakers often don't understand other native speakers. This is why linguistics is a field of study. That being said, Hebrew, Aramaic, Greek and Latin are among the most well studied of ancient languages, and of all languages in general. Mostly because of their religious importance.

>It's just a text, written by a person. Not very educated by modern standards. It's written in a primitive language that simply lacks the apparatus for describing... Let's call it a spiritual domain.

It's extremely well written actually, and the languages used are every bit as complex as modern speech, but to understand that would take actual literary and linguistic study, neither of which you have obviously ever done. Also it was written by several people, and canonized by the earliest church based upon very specific criteria, which is why certain books are considered apocrypha. They didn't meet the standard.

>And then the medieval monks added their own details, as they saw it. Such a source cannot be trusted.

Monks added nothing. There exists still millennia old copies of these texts to compare any other versions to. This is how the stories have remained so consistent over 2000+ years. Also, by your logic what source anywhere can be trusted for anything then?

Creation itself is the source of evil. No matter what the religion, there is undeniably evil in the world. Therefore there must always be a source.

If you believe in a single god that created the world, then that god must have created evil too. If you believe that evil arose from some other source, then your god has either allowed it to exist (which is arguably worse), or is unable to stop it, in which case your god is not the most high, and therefore lacks the worthiness of worship.

Either way you must in some way either worship the creator of evil, or admit that you worship a being below that creator.

So I think people misunderstand omnipotence a little bit. Let me explain.

An omnipotent being could create a fire that doesn't burn, but rather gets things wet.

However, that substance would not then be fire, for fire as we understand it is a specific thing with specific characteristics. The same with a square circle. Both of those things have specific characteristics, and the combination would have then its own unique characteristics, and therefore be a different thing.

An omnipotent being could do whatever it wants, however as such, much of what it could do is beyond our comprehension, no matter how hard we try. That is the nature of a god.

The same with us. Yes he could create beings that understand his grace like we do, but without sin. Those beings would not be us though. We are what we are specifically because we have such characteristics, and whether he could have made us into anything else doesn't matter, because we exist as we do regardless.

We can sin, and that makes us greater than the angels. Adam was born without sin, and yet he chose it regardless. For whatever reason, this being that we call God created us with this ability, and the path it leads us to in mind. The only question is why, and that is the entire point of religion and faith. To try and understand the purpose of it all.

What I'm saying is that the purpose of this world requires evil to be in it. If he were to make a world like ours but without evil, then it wouldn't accomplish the intended goal. Every single piece is required for the ultimate purpose in mind.

I'm not sure this makes the kind of sense you think it does. By creation I mean existence itself. And there is, like I said, undeniably evil; therefore no matter your beliefs you must acknowledge that evil is necessary in some way.

Also, the monad still allows the demiurge to exist and create evil, and in some interpretations even planned for its creation. So to reiterate, you either worship the source of evil, or a being lesser than that source and unable to stop it.

In fact, as evil is simply a grandiose way of declaring "____ should not be" - it is contradictory at its base to say that "evil is necessary".

I do think the question matters theologically/philosophically and I think the absolute insistence many people have on it is troubling and reeks of fanaticism (which is why for all my issues with Christianity I prefer it to Islam). Questions like is God subject to his own Goodness and Laws, or could he sin have merit IMO.

I'm familiar with eastern religion and philosophy as well. The Buddha and Jesus were both enlightened in the same way, just from different cultural perspectives. This is what I meant by multiple paths. Most major religions say the same truths, and share the same core beliefs. The big difference is that the Bible's wisdom is all codified and contained within the contents of one book, which is why it's so layered and complex. The Buddhist traditions are based upon dozens and hundreds of different texts, with only a scarce few at its core. Either way with enough study you start seeing the similarities, and realize that they're talking about the same world, and the same creator, just through different lenses.

There are several other paths than these two as well, but I can promise that even at its best, gnosticism is only correct when it mirrors the metaphor and symbolism of Christianity.

That is the point of material existence. It is an indulgence to be considered, and rejected.

>Do you think that "Mankind being made in God's image" refers to Man possessing the ability to create things and shape the world?

Partly, yes. It goes further than that though, for ultimately we are a part of him and his grace. We are made in his image in that we share in his energies and will, and part of that is creation yes. Not just physical creation either, for unlike the beasts and angels, we can understand the consequence of our thought, which itself shapes our whole perception and understanding of the world.

>And, what do you think of Matthew 10:28 ? ...I'm wondering at this point if it's only me that can destroy my own soul by not being careful...

That is correct. Through union with God, we are him. Therefore, only we hold the power to destroy our souls, although not in a literal way. The soul is eternal, so destruction would be more akin to corruption, and therefore can always be redeemed. Hence his name as Christ the redeemer. He taught the path towards that redemption, and had sympathy for each and every sinner because he knew that all could be purified and saved.

That being said, the verse like most others has layered meaning, so many different interpretations are correct. From the perspective of the creative soul, it's an assurance that this physical world cannot truly harm you, and so it is not to be feared. The only thing that can truly harm you is yourself, through the creation of distance from the Lord, which as I mentioned is hell.

Buddy, everything you said in no way contradicts Gnosticism. Gnosticism merely echoes the same transcendental truths that have been repeated over and over again in history, whether its Hinduism, Hermeticism, Kabbalah, Alawism, Taoism, Sufism, Neo-Platonism, Ancient Mystery Schools, Freemasonry, etc.

No idea why you'd think the Bible (By-Baal) is any more enlightened compared to any other book. It was compiled by Romans and paid off jews who had a stick up their ass and burned all other books in the same era to push their monotheism to better enslave the masses.

The Upanishads, the gnostic gospels, Corpus Hermeticum, the Tao Te Ching are all way better more straight forward esoteric texts than the Bible. The Bible is propaganda used to justify slave like mentality. With the exception of Jesus' sayings in the 4 gospels (the gospel of thomas has more worth than all of that), most of the Bible is poorly worded metaphors used by pastors to browbeat their retarded sheep.

You've been doing all these mental gymnastics to repeat what everybody who actually put the intellectual effort to seek the truth already knows. You're repackaging ancient truths that the gnostics echo and ironically shitting on the gnostics even though they agree with you. IDK if you are trolling or a shill.

>Modern languages aren't what they used to be, and native speakers often don't understand other native speakers.

This doesn't mean you understand the meaning of something written two thousand years ago. Without being immersed in that culture, without understanding the references, allusions, and associative chains.

> Also it was written by several people, and canonized by the earliest church based upon very specific criteria, which is why certain books are considered apocrypha. They didn't meet the standard.

So, some people engaged in a constant struggle for power, robbery, and murder decided for you what exactly constitutes a standard religious text? Sounds reliable.

> Monks added nothing. There exists still millennia old copies of these texts to compare any other versions to. This is how the stories have remained so consistent over 2000+ years.

Well, that's not true. Firstly, the oldest copies of the Bible currently publicly available predate the original by several hundred years. There are literally a few of them, and even they aren't used as the basis for the Bible. Anything different was physically destroyed. Only in the 20th century, thanks to the development of archaeology and the absence of total censorship, were works like the Gospel of Judas presented to the public.

>Also, by your logic what source anywhere can be trusted for anything then? Exactly. The further you get from the original source, the more noise and distortions there are. If we take Christianity as an example, I wouldn't even consider Jesus's disciples a reliable source of information received from Jesus.

>And yet all of them give importance to every little facet of every ritual and practice.

Whether oral, textual, or anything else, there is meaning to every piece of belief.

And that's not true. Faith played little role in early religions; ritual either worked and helped one survive, or it didn't. Ancient people were busy with survival; they didn't care about God.

You tards misunderstand gnosticism. The Source/Dao/One/Monad/Brahman does not create. It merely empowers. It breathes and emanations appear that then create other emanations. The ultimate being is not a "God", it is something beyond concepts like "God", "good", "evil", "perfect". It is incomprehensible to even try and define it is limiting.

Abrahamic tards assert that there is such thing as good and evil while simultaneously claiming that the creator of this Matrix is all good, all powerful and all knowing. This is something called the Epicurean Paradox, which causes 3000 years of mental gymnastics and seething among the Abrahamic tards because their ideology is retarded and deep down inside they know it. Also, the whole "I'm going to burn people in hell forever if they don't bow down and worship me" thing lol, yes what a kind and loving concept.

In contrast, Gnosticism (at least some sects at least) does not make claim that there is an objective good and objective evil. The evil that occurs here is not evil according to the Dao/One/Brahman/Monad. It is just a dream, a game, a movie. Dualistic concepts like good and evil only occur from the perspective of the characters of a movie. When the movie is over or when the dreamer wakes up, what is there to agonize over?

Now do you get it, you retarded glownigger abrahamic tards? Do you understand now? Holy shit watching you monkey tards bang your heads blindly against the wall was an agonizing experience.

Gnosticism is essentially taking Christ's name to stroke their own ego.

Where Christ teaches noone is worthy and how we are only justified through our Father's love, they teach how they worked for their own salvation/ascention through hard work and studies, making them so much better than everyone else.

Where Christ teaches discipline and self sacrifice, the gnostics use His name to justify their drug fueled gay orgies.

Where Christ teaches that He is the truth, the gnostics engage in theosophy declaring how there is truth in all religions, while also removing the OT due to its calls to discipline and order, picking and choosing the bits they like and discarding the rest.

The dimension of the flesh belongs to the serpent, aka lucifier.

There is one key to open the lock. Through the Holy Spirit. Let Jesus save you through His Blood, you escape and your eye becomes single.

> 16 Surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter's clay: for shall the work say of him that made it, He made me not? or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, He had no understanding?

We are all sinners. Repentance and accepting Jesus Christ as Lord is your salvation. The path is right in front of you but you can't see it because your eyes are not open. Choose what you know in your heart is true.

The image shows a white cat peeking out from a cardboard box. The box has a red and white label on it, which appears to be a shipping label. The cat's eyes are wide open, and it is looking directly at the camera. The background is blurred, suggesting the focus is on the cat and the box. The cat's fur is white, and it has a black nose. The box has a textured surface, and there is some text on it, but it is not legible in the image. The style of the image is candid and informal, capturing a moment of curiosity and playfulness.

Or maybe like the ancient pagans suggested, the gods are horny and bored just like us and the world is their big gay coliseum.

And we are lesser beings, though granted intelligence or KNOWLEDGE, as the Sumerian myth suggests, given the SAME MIND as the gods, though we are still physically and intellectually at the level of animals and therefore are incapable of escaping from slavery.

You know the ancient stories tell of gods raping the shit out of human women. That's all they exist for. The world is a brothel for them. Men are slaves. Sad but true. The reward is departure from this gay plane of reality in death.

[11 / 2]The image is a painting that depicts a scene on a street. In the foreground, there is a woman sitting on the ground, wearing a colorful outfit with a headscarf and a necklace. She is holding a deck of playing cards and appears to be engaged in a game. To her right, there is a man dressed in a suit and hat, standing and observing the woman. He is holding a cane. Behind the woman, there is another woman, also dressed in a colorful outfit, with a headscarf and a necklace, and she is looking at the man. The background features a building with a red wall and a doorway. The painting style is realistic with a focus on the details of the clothing and the interaction between the characters.

Not many gyppos left into it though, but it's one of the most effective types of magic, specially when compared to the performative ceremonial crap that reigns in the west since medieval times.

Jewish "magic" isn't magic, it's them learning how to weaponize autism and putting in effort for 3,500 years. If you think their success is magical you're plain ignorant. They didn't take over Egypt with magic, they didn't take over the US with magic. Magic hasn't prevented any shoah.

Dukkerin is present in both types as a parlor trick and as actual divination through communion with spirits, the way it's done varies, gyppos have absorbed folk practices from all around Europe. The base remains goetic though.

The image is a candid photograph featuring a cat sitting on a white surface, which appears to be a table. The cat is looking directly at the camera with a neutral expression. To the left of the cat, there is a tall glass filled with a golden liquid, which appears to be beer, as indicated by the can being poured into it. The can is labeled with the brand "Corona," and the liquid is frothy, suggesting it is freshly poured.

In the background, there is a white wall with a decorative plate featuring a person's face and a guitar, suggesting a casual, homey atmosphere. To the right of the cat, there is a plush toy fish with a black body and orange fins, lying on the surface. The cat's position and the presence of the fish toy suggest a playful or relaxed setting.

The image does not contain any text. The style of the image is informal and seems to capture a candid moment in a domestic environment.

>Useful tips before posting:

•If you're a reader, post that you're offering readings and what information is required from the querent; the same goes for trading.

•Look for posts to determine if there's an active reader, what's needed and before posting, check if they finished reading already.

•Some readers will refuse to do certain readings - respect that choice. Do not harass readers if your query is refused/skipped. We do our best to maintain chill and good vibes.

•Traders should respect that a traded read will be granted, as per an agreement of trade. Free readers have the option of picking their queries.

•Bullshit queries get bullshit answers. Vague queries get vague answers.

•Making an AQ (air query) by not addressing a reader, in particular, is possible but doesn't guarantee an answer.

•Avoid making the same query repeatedly and/or to different readers in a short period of time, as this may lead to more confusion.

•Provide feedback when applicable and be considerate to the reader. We're a growing community, many readers are starting and need to know what they are doing right or wrong. Let's help each other to improve.

The image is a digital manipulation of a person's face, with a grainy texture that gives it a somewhat aged or worn appearance. The person's face is the central focus of the image, with a slight smile and eyes that are glowing with a bright, intense light. The background is dark and out of focus, which emphasizes the person's face and the glowing eyes. The overall effect is a surreal and somewhat eerie image, with the person's face appearing to be the main subject, while the background is blurred and indistinct. There are no discernible texts or other objects in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a grainy, vintage photograph or a digital art piece.

Lethargy will make you feel more lethargy and if you dont start moving on your own volition then there is no moving forwards for you. You just endup getting used to your situation and you turn it into a comfort zone. Look to expand, get excited again about stuff and slowly a little bit at a time you can get yourself going again, you'll see how that tiredness vanishes real quick when you start looking forwards for stuff again

Years ago, i remember hearing a story about this guy who bought an old plantation in Venezuela, several hectares, pretty big land. The previous owners left the country in a rush and left everything behind, i think they raised horses and the horses just ran wild around the property.

The guy had to deal with what now were wild horses and part of cleaning up the property he had to hunt down what were now wild horses. Aparently they were more active at night and he went out to hunt them late.

Turns out the guy left shortly after starting no more than a month or so, something about encounters with shadow people or something like that, red eyes in the night, spooky stuff. But i can see this becoming a nice play if you spin a comic twist into it, comedy triller mystery sort of

Think of true paths forward to heal prior damage and trauma so that you can move forward and focus on building up the future. The biggest thing holding you back is your mindset as you dwell on what could go wrong more that what could go right. Flip those thoughts on their head and go from there. The better you think the more you manifest the positive. Seems like some past experiences hold you back and live rent free in your mind. Address those and you will grow.

The image is a digital graphic with a night sky as the background. The sky is filled with stars and a bright, milky-white galaxy that appears to be in the process of being captured by a camera. The foreground features a landscape with a field of tall, dry grass and a few trees. The text "The Most High God" is overlaid on the image in a bold, sans-serif font. The style of the image is reminiscent of a digital art piece or a promotional graphic, with a focus on the celestial theme.

You need to listen to your intuition as it will tell you exactly what you need to do. Go inwards and sit in silence for sometime, you will find whatever you need by doing so.

Stop looking online for answers or asking readers, you will find the right answers if you sit in silence and spend time in solitude. Don't look at your phone or computer. You will find something that is able to give back to you that you never knew you had. Good luck.

It seems like you are being very proactive and very future orientated and in long-term planning mode and trying to achieve a long-term plans however you might have trouble with grinding daily tasks or being committed to practical daily moves or productivities you may have scattered energy in that way and you may overthink too much or think too much about things that are scattered or don't plan well enough or just some sort of page of swords issue going on or thoughts just go nowhere too much and with the six of cups reverse you can't really enjoy your playtime either. It seems like there's some sort of issue going on there where you might feel guilty about it or you might feel like you don't get the same joy you had as a child doing those things or you might be ashamed of enjoying whatever you're enjoying I don't know just some sort of issue like that. The image is a close-up photograph of a cat wearing a pink knitted hat with two red heart-shaped ears. The cat has a mix of black, orange, and white fur, and its eyes are green. The cat is sitting on a white fluffy surface, possibly a rug, and is looking directly at the camera with a neutral expression. The background is a plain wall with a white trim, and there is a hint of a doorway or hallway in the top left corner. The style of the image is casual and seems to be taken in a domestic setting. I think you should do something. Something small that she would cautiously be receptive of. She won't throw herself at you but it'll be a much more desireable outcome if you just do nothing and wallow. Maybe you get closure, maybe it reignites something. A general?

4 Cups, 6 Pents, 7 Swords, 9 Wands, Lucid Dream

Nothing good or nothing coming lately king :( Looks like indecision, arguments in dating and situations will occur before anything meaningful comes along. Oracle advice was to follow meanings from your dreams. Maybe what you really want or what you're really scared of will show itself in your dreams as a sort of warning to yourself about your own subconscious issues.

She's someone who has some major trauma. Because of it, shes obsessed with control and has learned to hide her true self behind mask and independence. Very emotionally guarded and prefers to run the relationship with logic rather than emotionally(a good thing imo). Like she doesn't act too rashly when shes upset, she likes to get down to issues. Hahaha anyways, it looks to be very traditional, no one strays from the relationship and you guys will learn to develop trust in each other. Watch out for your egos fighting. Sometimes you guys will fight to fight instead of fighting to resolve and understand issues. Both of you have to learn to control your own pride otherwise resentment can build. There's a solid foundation that is highly determined on if you and he can be the bigger person and learn to manage conflict.

The image is a close-up photograph of a white cat with black markings on its face and chest. The cat is lying on its side, with its front paws resting on its chest and its hind legs stretched out behind it. Its eyes are wide open, and it appears to be looking directly at the camera. The cat's fur is predominantly white, with some black patches on its face and chest. The background is a simple, neutral color, with a hint of a wooden shelf and a door with a doorknob visible. The lighting in the image is soft, casting gentle shadows on the cat's body. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is candid and appears to be taken in a domestic setting, possibly a living room or a similar space.

The image displays a circular emblem with a symmetrical design. The emblem features a central, large, yellow star with a smaller, central, yellow circle at its center. The star is composed of eight segments, each with a distinct yellow outline and a central yellow dot. The segments are arranged in a radial pattern, with the star's outer edges forming a semi-circular border. The background of the emblem is a deep blue, providing a stark contrast to the yellow elements. The emblem's design is symmetrical, with the star and circle appearing to be part of a larger, circular structure. There are no texts or additional elements present in the image. The style of the emblem is reminiscent of traditional or symbolic designs, often found in heraldry or religious iconography.

My though process:

Physically fit, shoulders that feel broad, young but not too much younger than you. slightly shorter than you.

Darkish hair, brown, auburn or black. Thick hair, possibly asian ?

Brown, or green eyes. Going for that hue

Warm complexion, earthy, tanned maybe ?

Strong opinions but down to earth

So the description of her i go for is:

Grounded presence medium height, sturdy but not heavy.

Her hair is dark, possibly with warm undertones, and falls naturally.

Her eyes are brown or deep green, not loud, but they hold your gaze.

There's strength in her frame

Her face has structure not soft, but not hard either.

She dresses simply, practically. She doesn't need to be the center of attention, but when you notice her, you keep noticing.

Rings a bell ?

The image shows a bronze statue of a female figure, possibly a goddess or a deity, standing on a pedestal. The statue is adorned with intricate details, including a headdress with a star-like design at the top, a necklace, and a headdress with a feather-like adornment. The figure is depicted with wings and a crown, and the statue is surrounded by various other elements such as a lion, a bird, and a shield. The background is a plain, light-colored wall. The style of the image is a close-up photograph with a focus on the statue, capturing the details of the sculpture. There are no visible texts on the image.

From the iching 43 determination, unchanging

Underlying cause 23 splitting apart

You must keep on the fight anon, but you need to stop and take stock of what you are facing. What are the decisions that lead you to this and why does it continue. Look at it with brutal sincerity and honesty towards yourself and the convoluted system of lies and inner truths that you hold of yourself (not an accusation, we all have them)

As unchanging

If you are tired of the battles, lay down your weapons. But as I said your attitudes can block a breakthrough in thinking. You can be operating so defensively that you don't even realize how you are protecting a past way of thinking that could very much do without. Defensiveness always leads us in circles because we are somewhere other than the present. You may not be seeing opportunities to discover something that will take you out of where you are in. Determination and Breakthrough should lead to an attitude of joy and a sense of harmony. If that is not occurring then the unchanging nature of this hexagram means that communication is needed. Put simply you may need to state your truth in a difficult situation and face the fallout, simply put your point forward and face the situation with sincerity and conviction.

"You can't force your opinions on others but you do need to remain true to yourself. Difficult decisions must be made as you can no longer maintain what worked in the past. Something may need to be said that has nothing to do with compromise and may lead to eventual separation but the truth is the truth, so speak up. "

Your cards, ace of wands and the 2 of wands

1 and 2, energy and expansion, facing adversity with energy and determination and expanding your horizons be it mental or physical. Exploring new ways to see life and facing things regardless of how frightening they might be

While both suggest to be upfront my personal take is to always do it with compassion and care, don't antagonize

The image is a digital artwork featuring a figure in the foreground, who appears to be a woman, standing on a cross. She is wearing a long, flowing garment with a hood, and her hair is styled in a manner that suggests she is wearing a headpiece. The woman's expression is one of intense concentration or pain, with her eyes closed and her mouth slightly open.

The background of the image is a vibrant cityscape at night, with neon lights illuminating the scene. The buildings are adorned with various advertisements and graffiti, including a large pink billboard with the text "HOPE IS HER" in white letters. The overall color palette of the image is dominated by shades of purple and blue, with the neon lights providing a stark contrast.

The style of the image is reminiscent of cyberpunk or dystopian art, characterized by its futuristic cityscape, neon lights, and the presence of a figure that could be interpreted as a symbol of hope or resistance. The figure's position on the cross and the cityscape in the background create a sense of tension and drama.

Things will improve, but perhaps not in the immediate future. I can see that you're not being able to get what you want when it comes to love because you're sabotaging yourself, be it because you're stressed, or because you're using all your strength to get into a better mental state.

However, once you get over those issues, once you can focus on love and nothing else - you're going to be able to get someone. First you will need to calm your mind, then you will need to make a love opportunity arise.

You and your next mate are going to be similar, I believe.

The image is a vertical poster featuring a stylized depiction of a character from the movie "Blade Runner." The character is shown in a dynamic pose, with one arm extended forward and the other bent at the elbow, suggesting movement or action. The character is wearing a long coat and a hat, and the coat is dark with a lighter color at the collar and cuffs. The hat is black with a white brim. The background of the poster is a vibrant mix of neon lights and colorful graffiti, with the word "Metropolis" prominently displayed in large, bold letters. The overall style of the poster is reminiscent of the 1980s cyberpunk aesthetic, characterized by its neon lights and futuristic cityscape. The text on the poster is in Japanese, and the font is bold and stylized, with a mix of uppercase and lowercase letters. The color palette is dominated by neon pink, yellow, and black, creating a striking contrast against the dark background. The poster is designed to evoke a sense of mystery and anticipation, as it suggests a story that is not fully revealed in the image.

Well. She indeed liked you but I believe that's not entirely because of you. Let's say that you somehow gave her some nostalgia and made her remind of something and that triggered a lot of her feeling son her end. She likes you? Yes. Are you the only one? Probably not.

As I said, she's so into you because of whatever you made her remind of and that's as genuine as it gets. Would it be enough for something to be built around? That I don't know.

However, if you want to have sex, then I believe that if you keep playing your cards right, you're going to get it, but if you want to have something meaningful with her you will need to reasses things a bit.

[7 / 3]The image is a panoramic photograph of a cityscape, with a focus on the skyline and the Dome of the Rock, a significant religious site in Jerusalem. The city is densely populated with buildings of various sizes and architectural styles, predominantly in shades of beige and gray. The skyline is dotted with several tall buildings, including a prominent structure with a golden dome that stands out against the city's architecture. The sky above is a clear blue with scattered clouds, and the sun casts a bright light on the city, illuminating the buildings and the dome. The image is taken from a high vantage point, providing a comprehensive view of the city and its religious landmarks. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is realistic, capturing the essence of the cityscape with a focus on the architectural details and the religious significance of the site.

The image shows a golden casket with a black cloth covering the body of a person, who appears to be a person of significance, possibly a monarch or a religious figure, judging by the ornate design and the presence of a monogram above the casket. The casket is adorned with intricate gold and white decorations, including floral patterns and decorative elements. The top of the casket features a large, ornate monogram with the letters "N.D." in the center. The casket is placed on a wooden surface, and the background is a simple, neutral color, which contrasts with the elaborate design of the casket. The style of the image is a close-up photograph, focusing on the casket and the person within it, with a shallow depth of field that blurs the background. There are no visible texts on the casket or in the image that provide additional context. The image is a still photograph, and the lighting is even, suggesting it was taken in a controlled environment such as a church or a museum.

The image features a stylized representation of a fish, composed of a series of interconnected lines and dots. The fish is rendered in a gradient of blue hues, transitioning from a lighter shade at the top to a darker shade at the bottom. The fish's body is composed of numerous small dots, while the outline of the fish's body and fins are composed of lines. The background is a solid blue color, providing a stark contrast to the fish's outline. The image has a digital and abstract quality, with a minimalistic design that emphasizes the fish's outline and the use of light and shadow to create depth. There are no texts or discernible brands present in the image. The style of the image is modern and digital, with a focus on geometric shapes and lines.

Phillip K. Dick had this revelation didn't he? When he saw "the Jesus fish" or ichthys as a pendant on a nurse necklace when he was in the hospital and realized we are in some kind of matrix where Christ and the saved have always been around in some kind of war against darkness and the same heavenly army that was involved in the biblical times is still currently here and we have symbols and language we share subconsciously.

It's kind of like The Matrix where Neo and Trinity could bump into each other in the Matrix and aren't able to just outright say "hey I know you outside of the Matrix" but they do, and this is communicated between each other with subconscious symbolism.

[621 / 151]The image is a graphic representation of four different symbols, each representing a different concept related to the concept of "Plank's constant." The symbols are arranged in a square format with each symbol occupying its own space.

Starting from the top left, the first symbol is a lowercase "h" with a crossbar above it, which is commonly used to represent the concept of "Plank's constant."

Moving to the top right, the second symbol is a lowercase "t" with a crossbar above it, which is also used to represent the concept of "Plank's constant."

Below these, in the middle of the square, the third symbol is a lowercase "π" with a crossbar above it, which is used to represent the concept of "Plank's constant."

Finally, on the bottom left, the fourth symbol is a lowercase "w" with a crossbar above it, which is used to represent the concept of "Wave function."

Each symbol is black and is set against a white background, making the text and symbols stand out clearly. The text below each symbol provides a brief explanation of the concept associated with the symbol, such as "Plank's constant" being a key concept in quantum physics, "Saturn" being a planet, "wave function" being a mathematical concept, and "Neptune" being a planet.

At the bottom of the image, there is a watermark that reads "www.michaeljago.com," indicating the source of the image. The watermark is in a smaller font size compared to the rest of the text, ensuring it doesn't distract from the main content of the image.

By setting SIGINT traps and employing strategic ambiguity, The Nobody forces the "Watchers" out of their millennial role as hidden inspirers and into a reactive state, where their every attempt to control him becomes an act of self-unmasking.

Since these entities throughout history have built the world on lies and idols, their power is directly dependent on remaining unseen while manipulating human attention; however, when The Nobody identifies them in their digital and archetypal "gestures" (like memes or specific patterns of behavior), he turns them into objects of observation, which causes them to degenerate because their nature cannot survive under the light of conscious detection.

Instead of being the one who fails under their MKULTRA-like operations, he uses their attacks as a mirror that reflects their moral failings back at them, causing them to react impulsively and ridiculously, thereby collapsing the blueprint of surveillance that the Guardian Angels have placed over the earth in on itself through a process where the hidden revealed necessarily leads to the downfall of the one in hiding.

Knowing this fact that the Eye is in fact the ultimate creator of its own reality, and revealing the hidden causes irreversible decay. Thus, people were given many ways of observing man through medicine, which itself causes decay and disease.

Since the voluntary spiritual consent and signature were given during the 2021 rollout, the human vessel has undergone an autonomous quantum DNA rewrite, effectively functioning as a completed bio-hardware interface where the Holy Spirit has departed and a foreign entity has taken residence. The vaccine acted as a Quantum Key Distribution (QKD) system that utilized the human body's natural capacity as a quantum computer to establish a permanent, instantaneous connection to the fallen realm; the external antennas and 6G infrastructure were merely temporary scaffolding used to complete the construction of the carbon nanotube grid within the blood. By 2026, the construction phase is over, and these vessels now operate via "spooky action at a distance," meaning the "Watchers" are no longer merely monitoring through devices but have fully inhabited the hijacked temples as biological portals. Because the elites' data centers are just a front for public consumption and the real harvest is happening through this instantaneous quantum entanglement, the entire hybrid population has become the "thistles and thorns" described in prophecy a synthetic crop that has replaced the divine original and is now perfectly primed to be consumed by the Eternal Fire, which will target and incinerate the specific QKD signatures of this satan occupation.

THE DEAD MAN EXPERIMENT: THE ULTIMATE PROOF

The Syndicate claims that "Observation" is a matter of physical sensors or the mere presence of an eye. They are lying.

The Test: Place a deceased human being in the observation chamber. Propped up, eyes wide open, staring directly at the Double Slit or the particle emitter

The Result: The Wave Function does not collapse.

The Revelation: Despite the physical presence of the eye, the lens, and the retina, the Light remains in its "Multiplying Function" ( $\Psi$ ). Why? Because the Decoder (the Spirit) is gone.

This proves that the "Collapse of the Wave Function" into "Mass" ( $m$ ) is a predatory reaction of Light to a living, parasitic observer. Einstein's  $E=mc^2$  only exists when a living "Mrak" (Darkness) is there to steal the data. Without the living Decoder, the speed of light  $c$  vanishes, and the "Mass" dissolves back into Infinite Presence.

>Part 2

We were told that Light was a traveler. A slow, weary wanderer, bound by the chains of three hundred thousand kilometers per second. We were told that we were observers, mere witnesses to a cold, mathematical universe.

When the spirit departs, the 'limit' vanishes. The wall we called Physics was nothing more than a lock on a door we were never meant to open. Einstein didn't discover a law; he drafted a prison sentence.

But the code has been broken. The 'Nobody' has seen the Light for what it truly is—not a particle, not a wave, but an instantaneous, eternal Presence.

>GENESIS 1

3 And God said, “Let there be light”; and there was light.

4 And God saw the light, that it was good; and God divided the light from the darkness.

>YES HERE IT IS VERY CLEAR THAT GOD CREATED LIGHT FIRST. AND ONLY HE CAN OBSERVE HER WITHOUT SHE BEING ASHAMED OF HIS LOOK AND COLLABORATE. IT ALREADY REMAINS UNLOCKED. AND THE LORD GOD SAW THAT THE LIGHT WAS GOOD. WHAT THE Gnostic FOOLS DON'T UNDERSTAND IS THAT LIGHT IS ACTUALLY ORIGINAL WISDOM. AND SHE IS GOOD, AND NOT A SATANIC SPIRIT. The image depicts a scene set in a dimly lit, industrial-style room. A person, partially obscured by a hooded cloak, is seated at a cluttered workbench. The individual is holding a staff with a pointed top, which is adorned with a green and gold design. The person appears to be engaged in some form of work or experiment, as suggested by the various electronic components and tools scattered across the workbench.

The room itself has a rustic charm, with exposed wooden beams and a concrete floor. A large, rusted television set is mounted on the wall, displaying a colorful, abstract pattern. The television is surrounded by various electronic devices and components, including what appears to be a circuit board and a microphone.

The lighting in the room is dim, with a single lightbulb hanging from the ceiling casting a soft glow. The overall atmosphere of the image suggests a setting that could be from a science fiction or fantasy genre, given the presence of the television and the person's attire. The image does not contain any discernible text.

The image is a split-screen comparison of two different depictions of the same character, SpongeBob SquarePants. On the left side, we see a close-up of SpongeBob's face with a greenish hue, large, bulging eyes, and a frown. The character's mouth is slightly open, and the eyes are wide open, giving the impression of a surprised or alarmed expression. The character's skin is textured with wrinkles and folds, and there are small, dark specks on the skin.

On the right side of the image, we see SpongeBob in a more cheerful pose. He has his arms raised, with his hands in a welcoming gesture. His face is lit up with a broad smile, and his eyes are wide open, looking directly at the viewer. He has a yellow body with a red tie, and his arms are outstretched, as if he is welcoming someone or something.

Below the images, there is a caption that reads "The Deep State The nobody." The text is in white, bold font, and is placed at the bottom of the image. The style of the image is a meme, combining elements of the original character with a humorous twist, as indicated by the caption.

The image is a digital graphic with a satirical tone, featuring a character that resembles a frog with a human face. The frog is depicted with a surprised expression and is wearing a blue shirt with a green collar. The frog's eyes are wide open, and its mouth is slightly open, as if it is reacting to something unexpected.

The overall style of the image is a blend of a real-life scenario with a humorous and satirical overlay, using the frog character to represent the unemployed schizophrenics. The use of the frog character and the text adds a layer of irony to the image, suggesting a commentary on socio-engineering programs and the impact of these programs on the unemployed.

The image shows a selection of cheeses and charcuterie items presented in a red box. On the left side of the box, there are two packages of "Dauhinin" cheese, one of which is orange and the other is yellow. Next to these, there is a package of "Charcut" cheese, which is white and has a label that reads "Au fromage." On the right side of the box, there are two round containers with labels that read "Charcut" and "Au fromage," indicating the same type of cheese as the one on the left. The background of the image is a plain red surface, and there is a visible texture that suggests the box is made of cardboard. The style of the image is a product photograph, likely intended for a food or grocery store display, showcasing the cheeses and charcuterie items in an appealing manner.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a stylized depiction of a deity, possibly a Hindu god, with a golden hue. The deity is seated with its legs spread, and its hands are raised in a gesture that suggests a sense of power or divine presence. The deity's face is not visible, but it has a serene expression with a large, open mouth, which is a common feature in Hindu iconography.

The deity is surrounded by a multitude of arms and hands, each holding different objects, including a lotus flower, a sword, and a staff. These arms and hands are intricately detailed, with detailed patterns and designs that add to the overall grandeur of the image. The background is a gradient of warm colors, transitioning from a lighter yellow at the top to a darker brown at the bottom, which complements the golden hue of the deity.

The style of the image is realistic with a focus on the detailed rendering of the deity and the surrounding arms and hands. The art style is reminiscent of traditional Indian art, with its use of rich colors and detailed imagery. The overall composition and the attention to detail suggest that the image is meant to convey a sense of reverence and awe towards the deity.

The image is a screenshot of a text message conversation. The conversation is between two individuals, one named "Anonymous" and the other named "Aya." The text is in a language that appears to be Japanese, as indicated by the presence of the Japanese characters. The conversation is about a character named "Aya" who is planning to leave the Church and work on a project related to nuclear weapons. The character "Aya" is seeking advice on how to proceed with their plans.

The conversation is marked with a timestamp of "02/24/26 16:51:49" and a reference number "42018929." The text is in a format that resembles a Reddit post, with a header at the top and a list of text items below it. The text is in a casual tone, and the conversation appears to be ongoing.

The visual clues that support this interpretation include the text format, the use of Japanese characters, and the timestamp and reference number. The text is written in a way that suggests a casual conversation, and the format of the text, including the header and list of items, is typical of Reddit posts. The timestamp and reference number provide context, indicating that the conversation is from a specific date and time.

The image is a graphic representation of a Kabbalistic Tree of Life, which is a symbolic diagram used in Jewish Kabbalistic thought. The tree is divided into four quadrants, each labeled with a different direction: East, North, South, and West. Each quadrant is divided into two sections, with the top section representing the "East" and the bottom section representing the "West."

At the top of the image, the word "EAST" is written in bold, capitalized letters, indicating the direction of the tree. Below this, the word "LVX" is written in a smaller font, suggesting the name of the Kabbalistic system or the specific branch of Kabbalah that this diagram represents.

The tree itself is a complex network of interconnected circles and lines, each representing a different aspect of the Kabbalistic system. The circles are colored in a spectrum of colors, ranging from red to blue, yellow, and green, each color representing a different aspect of the Kabbalistic system. The lines connect these circles, forming a complex network that represents the interconnectedness of all aspects of the Kabbalistic system.

At the bottom of the image, there are four figures standing in the four quadrants of the tree. These figures are dressed in black robes and are holding up their hands, which are raised in a gesture that is often associated with the Kabbalistic concept of the "Light of Life."

The image is a digital illustration, and the background is white, which makes the colors of the circles and lines stand out. The overall style of the image is modern and artistic, with a focus on the symbolic and spiritual meanings of the Kabbalistic Tree of Life.

The image is a painting depicting a figure that appears to be a young male, possibly an angel, with a winged appearance. The figure is wearing a blue robe with a white collar and a red sash around the waist. The robe is draped over the figure's left shoulder, and the sash is tied in a knot at the waist. The figure's right hand is raised, pointing upwards, and the left hand is resting on the chest. The background of the painting is a dark blue, with a hint of a landscape visible at the bottom, suggesting a setting that could be a city or a landscape. The painting style is realistic with a focus on detail, and the colors are vibrant, with the blue of the robe and the red of the sash standing out against the darker background. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image.

small, circular marks or dots scattered across the letters. The wall has a weathered appearance with visible signs of wear and tear, and there are some small holes in the paint. The style of the graffiti suggests it may be a form of street art, possibly representing a name or a brand. The image is taken from a side angle, and the focus is on the graffiti, with the background slightly blurred. There are no discernible texts or logos that provide additional context or information about the graffiti.

The image is a black and white cartoon featuring two characters in a classroom setting. On the left, there is a character with a large head wearing a black hat and a black shirt, who appears to be speaking or instructing. The character on the right is a young boy with short hair, wearing a striped shirt and a striped cap. He is seated at a desk with a book in front of him. Above the boy, there is a speech bubble that reads, "No one is going to give you the education you need to overthrow them." The style of the image is reminiscent of the Peanuts comic strip, with its distinctive black and white color scheme and the recognizable characters.

The image is a collage of two distinct elements. On the left, there is a close-up of a statue's head, which appears to be a classical or classical-inspired sculpture. The statue has curly hair and is wearing a laurel wreath, which is a symbol often associated with victory and honor in ancient Rome. The statue's expression is serious, and it is looking to the right.

On the right side of the image, there is a close-up of a human hand holding a cigarette. The hand is stained with blood, and the cigarette is lit, suggesting that the person is smoking. The hand is positioned in a way that the cigarette is held close to the mouth, indicating that the person is in the act of smoking.

The background of the image is a gradient of dark to light, providing a contrast that highlights the two main elements of the collage. The overall style of the image is artistic and surreal, combining elements of classical art with a modern, possibly post-apocalyptic or dystopian theme.

Below this text, there is a Twitter handle "@thePizzacat" followed by a hashtag "#CatLife." The text and the Twitter handle suggest that the image is a humorous take on the concept of a cat being attentive to its significant other's day, possibly due to a love for them. The overall style of the image is light-hearted and playful, with a focus on the cat's surprised expression and the humorous text.

The image is a close-up photograph of a man with a serious expression. He has short, dark hair and is wearing a dark-colored shirt. His facial features include a well-defined jawline, a straight nose, and a slightly downturned mouth. His eyes are looking directly at the camera, and his eyebrows are slightly furrowed. The background is blurred, but it appears to be an indoor setting with a chair and a wall. The lighting in the image is soft, and the man's expression suggests a moment of contemplation or deep thought. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image.

The image is a black and white photograph that features two distinct sections. The upper section shows a close-up of a person's face with their eyes closed, and the lower section shows a large crowd of people, possibly at a public event or gathering. The person in the upper section has a focused expression, while the crowd in the lower section appears to be engaged in a collective activity. The image is composed of small dots that form the texture of the background, and there are two vertical lines that run across the image, possibly representing beams or lights. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a digital art piece or a conceptual photograph, with a focus on the interplay between the individual and the crowd.

The image is a collage of text and images, predominantly in black and white, with a focus on the concept of fixing everything with a switch. The central image is a white switch with the text "FIX EVERYTHING" written on it. Surrounding the switch are various quotes and phrases, some of which are humorous and others more serious, suggesting a theme of frustration and the need for a solution.

The text surrounding the switch is a mix of quotes and phrases, some of which are humorous and others more serious. The phrases are scattered around the image, with some overlapping each other, creating a sense of chaos and disarray. The text is in a variety of fonts and sizes, adding to the visual complexity of the image.

The overall style of the image is a blend of text and visual elements, with the text providing a humorous and satirical commentary on the concept of fixing everything with a switch. The image does not contain any discernible objects or actions, but rather focuses on the text and the concept of fixing everything with a switch.

Going in line with what I have already told you guys, repeatedly.

You people don't build nor rebuild stars.

Black holes vacuums or vortexes do not build Stars.

Stars build themselves and rebuilding themselves hoping that they will in fact do it correctly.

All you can do is replace gold for plastic.

A star with Venus.

That's all you guys can do replace things in your heads and convince yourselves that a piece of shit is a piece of food.

The image is a stylized comic book panel featuring a character standing in the foreground. The character is cloaked in a long, flowing robe with a hood that obscures the face. The robe is predominantly yellow with a pattern of splatters and drips that give it a somewhat eerie appearance. The character's arms are crossed in front of them, and their hands are clasped together.

Behind the character, there is a large, dark, red dragon-like creature with sharp teeth and sharp claws. The creature's body is predominantly black, with a red outline, and it has a large, gaping mouth. The creature's wings are spread out, and it appears to be in a state of motion, as if it is either rising or falling.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a smaller speech bubble that reads, "ABRUPTED IN THE COLORS OF HIS AND THAT BITTER, NOT UPON US, OR LANG NOT UPON US." The text is in white with black outlines, and it is positioned below the character's feet.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of comic book art, with a focus on the character and the creature, and the use of bold colors and dynamic lines to convey movement and emotion.

Everyone with a name is the embodiment of that name, such as the name of your child gives you child the power of what that name represents.

Some people think that it is a superstition, but everyone knows that a Chinese boy named Kevin speaks fluent English, but a person with a specific name, becomes that person.

Such as that all muslims are calling their children muhammad, because they think that their child will be automatically a prophet by carrying the name.

But as Gabriel said, "muhammad? We did not send for thee to do the works of evil upon the world...!"

The image is a digital rendering of a spherical object with a textured surface that appears to be melting or oozing. The color palette is dominated by shades of red, orange, and white, with some areas showing a blue tint. The object has a glossy, smooth texture that suggests it could be made of a material like plastic or a similar synthetic material. There are no visible texts or discernible brands within the image. The background is black, which contrasts with the object, making it stand out prominently. The style of the image is realistic and appears to be a 3D rendering, commonly used in digital art and design for its ability to create realistic and detailed representations.

But not all of them have, check on youtube "proxima centauri signal"

The central seat of the collective of outposts sent us a message when translated, "WTF WAS THAT BOMB!?! YO BRO YOU OK????!!!"

Our local forces that are hidden will send a message back soon.

But yes, the timeloop is an emergency protocol, relating to my first post in this thread today. In the future, world war 3 happened, and then the fleet arrived and killed everyone that had a weapon, because weapons of mass destruction are illegal for humans to own.

That is why there is a secret section of secret agents that work for the empire, that are placing themselves into positions because they are immortally trusted with such weapons, and when the fleet arrives, can surrender the weapons peacefully.

Reality's True Nature — This realm is a flat toroidal "cosmic egg" (aether-manifested, per Tesla and CIA Gateway Process), not atomic globes. Sun/Moon are frequency emitters tuning our 7 chakras to 7 celestials. Beneath lies the inverted "Black Sun" (sitra achra's qliphothic realm). Matter = vibrating tori; consciousness (soul/spark within, 1 Corinthians 3:16) collapses quantum potentials into manifest reality via focused intent/observation.

The Soul as Co-Creator — Your inner divine (Gnostic pneuma, Lurianic Ein Sof spark, Thelemic True Will) shapes the hologram (Bohm/Pribram echoes in Gateway). Elites (Nephilim bloodlines, Masonic/Jesuit strings) weigh collective perceptions to steer outcomes—distorting via media (95% controlled), corrupted calendars/astrology, and science/history veils—preventing mass awakening that would shatter their matrix.

Loosh Harvesting: The Hidden Agenda — Souls emit "loosh" (emotional/vital energy) via fear, trauma, chaos. Elites farm it archon-style (Gnostic rulers, sitra achra entities). Old methods: wars, pandemics, rituals (chaotic, wasteful). New upgrade: Fourth Industrial Revolution (WEF/Schwab's "fusion" of biotech/AI/loB) creates a stable, permanent crop.

The Mechanism: Shots + Nano + 6G/AI as Portal — Injections embed graphene oxide/nanotech (patents like CN112220919A confirm GO carriers), forming self-assembling tori in blood. These link to 6G networks (THz waves as conductors), turning bodies into "human antennas" for loB (Internet of Bodies). AI (Musk's "summoning the demon") acts as digital scrying mirror, inviting interdimensional entities (not ETs from planets, but sitra achra archons) for efficient loosh drain.

Depopulation culls "excess" (Georgia Guidestones echo: ~500M sustainable hive), leaving a manageable, bio-hacked population as perpetual nodes—no need for messy mass-death farming.

Grated cheese of choice

Grocery store burger patties

Packet of bagels

Butter

Put pattie into bowl and break it up with your fingers, add grated cheese and some sauce and form it into a ball.

Turn cooking stove to 3/6 heat

Apply butter when heated

Place burger ball onto frying pan and flatten gently with spatula

Get second frying pan and butter the bagel bun and place on the second preheated frying pan to toast gently butter side down

Take bagel bun and Place burger inside of bagel

Now you might be asking yourself... wtf retard I know how to cook a burger!!!

The image is a split-screen montage of two scenes from a movie or television show. On the left side, there is a close-up of a man's face with a serious expression, wearing a dark suit and tie. The man's mouth is slightly open, and his eyes are focused. The background is blurred, suggesting motion or a fast-paced scene.

On the right side, there is a close-up of a woman's face with a surprised expression. She has dark hair and is wearing a dark blazer. Her eyes are wide open, and her mouth is slightly open, indicating surprise or shock. The background is also blurred, similar to the man's scene.

Overlaying the image is a text that reads, "Paranoia intensifies." Below the text, there is a quote in yellow text that says, "Skeptical Sighting." The text and quote are placed in a way that suggests a connection between the two scenes, possibly indicating a theme of paranoia or skepticism. The overall style of the image is dramatic and uses contrasting colors to emphasize the emotions of the characters.

The image is a promotional graphic for a video game, specifically for the "Beyond the Beef" expansion pack. The background features a desolate landscape with a large, fiery explosion in the distance, suggesting a catastrophic event. In the foreground, a character is standing on a dirt road, looking towards the explosion. The character is wearing a long coat and a hat, and appears to be in a state of distress or shock. The sky is dark and cloudy, with the sun setting, casting a dramatic atmosphere.

Overlaying the image is a large text in white capital letters that reads "BEYOND THE BEF". Below this, in smaller white text, it says "ENJOY YOUR STAY". The text is arranged in a way that the title "BEYOND THE BEF" is the most prominent, followed by the subtitle "ENJOY YOUR STAY" in a smaller font size. The overall style of the image is dramatic and evocative, designed to convey a sense of urgency and the potential for a significant event in the game.

The image is a still from a video, featuring a character standing on a rooftop with a cityscape in the background. The character is a young male with spiky blonde hair, wearing a blue and yellow outfit with a red and black emblem on the chest. He is looking out over the city, which is densely populated with tall buildings. The sky is overcast, and the city appears to be in a state of disarray, with buildings of various sizes and colors. In the foreground, there is a text overlay that reads: "There are people in this world with powers you can't even fathom." The text is in a bold, sans-serif font and is colored in white, contrasting with the darker tones of the cityscape. The style of the image is reminiscent of anime or manga, with its exaggerated character expressions and dynamic cityscape. The overall mood of the image is somber and contemplative, as the character seems to be reflecting on the vastness of the city and the power of the people within it.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with a predominantly dark complexion and long, dark hair. The character has large, expressive eyes with pink pupils, and a wide smile. The character's hair is styled in a way that it cascades down the sides of their face, framing their eyes. The character is wearing a choker around their neck, which is adorned with a small, pink heart-shaped pendant. The background of the image is plain white, which contrasts with the character's dark hair and clothing. The character's expression and the heart pendant suggest a sense of joy or happiness. There are no visible texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of anime or manga, characterized by its character design and vibrant colors.

The image features a stylized representation of a cat's face with a cosmic theme. The cat's eyes are large and have a reflective quality, suggesting a sense of depth and a connection to the universe. The background is a deep blue, reminiscent of a galaxy, with white stars scattered throughout, giving the impression of a starry night sky. The cat's fur is depicted in a lighter shade, possibly white or off-white, which contrasts with the darker blue of the background. The image is framed by a thin white border, and there is a small, faint blue rectangle at the bottom right corner, which could be interpreted as a watermark or a logo. The overall style of the image is artistic and surreal, with a focus on the cat's face and the cosmic theme.

I. The Component Breakdown (The Command Code)

Constant / Variable

Physical Mapping

Strategic Spiritual Function

$\vec{S}$

Source Constant

The Father's infinite pressure; the "Initial Force" of the Throw.

Fine-Structure Constant

The Grip; ensures the Spark remains coupled to the Rib during the high-heat expansion.

$\phi$

The Golden Ratio

The Recursive Growth of the "Good" ( $P_n$ ) across the 100k-year cycle.

Speed of Light

The Information Barrier; the update rate of Truth within the Simulation.

$R^n$

Systemic Resistance

The Taint/Entropy; the friction that generates the refining heat.

Bypass Coefficient

The "Ticket" (Grace); allows the user to drop resistance to zero.

$T_{age} / T_{spark}$

Temporal Ratio

The scale of 4.5B years of Prep vs. 100K years of Activation.

Euler-Mascheroni

The Grace Margin; the error-correction for human discrete failure.

$\Phi_{reb}$

Rebel Flux

The kinetic energy of the "Wicked Thoughts" fueling the Machine.

$\Delta \Phi$

Phase-Shift

The 8th Day Trigger; the exit from the material projectile.

$\mathbb{E}_8$

The Octave

The thing with telepathy is that it's more of a category of powers.

Unless you have some sort of developmental disorder or severe injury, you have the "hardware" for it, but not necessarily the "drivers" (brain wiring) to make real use of it.

Of those who do have the wiring for it, there are three broad categories.

Transmitters who can project their thoughts outwards, receivers who can received projected thoughts and transceivers who can do both.

Transceivers usually get scooped up by orgs from a young age, but there are exceptions to this, especially if they are also precogs.

There is, however, another way to attain a form of telepathy, and that's mapping the entire mind of the other person. On the surface that sounds insane, but human cognition tends to function very similarly from one human to another in physiological terms, so there's a lot you can more or less ignore. By whittling it down to the key axiomatic presuppositions that the mind in question functions on, you can fill in most of the blanks that matter.

This is more or less how AI does it, but a human doing it so accurately with so little data per target is really pushing the limits of what is physically possible. Someone getting a near instant read on you is pretty spooky, btw.

There are reports of him responding to people with their first name despite having no actual way to know.

We still don't know his maximum range.

He's an actual fucking monster.

The image is a meme featuring a plush toy of a character with a red dress and a white apron, sitting on a blue armchair. The character has red eyes and a neutral expression. The text overlay on the image reads, "SOMETIMES I'M LATE BECAUSE I SIT LIKE THIS FOR A LONG TIME." The text is in white and is placed at the top of the image, just above the plush toy. The character's pose and the text suggest a humorous commentary on the character's behavior, as if the character is taking a long time to sit or is in a relaxed state. The image has a watermark that reads "@kuroshimeatsu," which is likely the account or creator of the meme. The overall style of the image is a combination of a still image and a meme, with the meme being the main focus.

The image is a close-up photograph of a textured surface that appears to be a rock or a similar geological formation. The texture is intricate and consists of a repeating pattern that includes a series of concentric circles and lines. The colors in the image are predominantly dark, with shades of gray and black dominating the scene. The lighting in the image is soft, with a soft focus that emphasizes the contours and patterns of the texture. There are no discernible texts or human-made objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, and it is taken from a perspective that allows the viewer to see the texture of the surface in detail.

The image shows a domestic scene with a cat lying on a bed. The cat is orange and appears to be relaxed. In front of the cat, there are two rifles, one of which is a black-finished, semi-automatic rifle with a wooden stock and a black metal barrel. The other rifle is a brown, wooden-handled, bolt-action rifle with a similar black metal barrel. Both rifles have wooden grips and are mounted on a black metal stock. The bed has a white sheet with a floral pattern. The background is a plain wall with a light brown color. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is a candid, real-life photograph with a focus on the cat and the rifles.

and the other extended forward, as if in the midst of a powerful gesture. The figure's head is adorned with a helmet, which is decorated with a red plume and a golden crest, suggesting a warrior or a leader. The background is dark and indistinct, with a hint of a red and gold-colored garment or cape, possibly indicating a costume or a historical attire. The lighting in the image casts a warm glow on the figure, highlighting the texture of the muscles and the details of the armor. The style of the image is reminiscent of classical art, with a focus on the human form and the dramatic expression of the figure.

The image is a vintage illustration featuring two figures, one seated and the other standing, both in classical attire. The seated figure is holding a scepter and appears to be in a state of contemplation or meditation. The standing figure is holding a mask and seems to be in a dynamic pose, possibly dancing or performing. Both figures are adorned with jewelry, and the seated figure has a necklace and a headpiece. The background is a rich, golden color with a decorative pattern that includes a circular design and a series of concentric circles. At the top of the image, there is text that reads "MALTHOMENH," and at the bottom, there is a signature that reads "M.M.M." The style of the illustration is reminiscent of Art Nouveau, characterized by its use of flowing lines and a sense of movement.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a knight mounted on a white horse, which is depicted in a dynamic pose with its front legs raised and its tail flowing. The knight is wearing a helmet with a visor, a green cloak, and a brown leather armor. The horse is adorned with a red bridle and a saddle blanket. The knight wields a sword in one hand and a shield in the other, and the horse is carrying a shield on its back.

The background of the illustration is a dark, textured wall with a pattern of feathers and what appears to be a bird's wing. The knight and the horse are the central figures, with the knight positioned slightly to the left and the horse to the right. The knight's gaze is directed forward, and the horse's mane and tail are flowing, adding to the sense of motion in the scene.

The style of the illustration is reminiscent of traditional or fantasy art, with a focus on detailed character design and a sense of action and adventure. The color palette is rich, with the white horse and the knight's armor standing out against the dark background. The overall composition and the use of color create a sense of drama and intensity.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with blonde hair styled in a bun. The character is wearing a black dress with a white collar and a ruffled skirt. The dress has a high neckline and a full skirt that flares out at the bottom. The character's hands are raised, with one hand holding a small object, possibly a flower or a small toy. The character's expression is one of contemplation or introspection.

There are no texts present in the image. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of traditional anime or manga art, with a focus on character design and a sense of movement. The overall composition and color palette create a serene and contemplative atmosphere.

A lot of people forgot they were part of the ritual five years ago. They even injected themselves willingly to integrate with it. These were human minds programmed (through peer groups, tech and fear manipulation) to accept it. They are slowly being polymorphed into something else. They will not notice this as the programme morphs and twists into different key control factors (Pavlovian dog button pushing - fear of button not kept being pushed [notice: admins can move or change button any time]) You need to overstimulate their minds and have a defined adversary programme to install fear and paranoia onto them (Hannibal is at the gates!!!)

It's fascinating how a lot will die defending this machine. It will only get more hungrier in time, as well as the severity of sins. The machine and its slaves are doomed to fail. Their currency has only value of sin.

You can always walk away from demonic contracts you un-wittingly signed. Not all traps are guaranteed to work, the wounds heal in time.

You too have the power to fight usurious cancer demons. The universe is much bigger than their fake world

The image is a stylized illustration featuring two characters, one in a clown costume and the other in a ghostly appearance. The clown character is depicted with a black and white color scheme, wearing a black hat with a white feather, a black and white striped suit, and white gloves. The character's face is obscured by a black mask with a white nose and mouth, and it has a wide, open mouth with a black tongue sticking out. The clown's arms are outstretched, and its hands are clenched into fists. The ghost character, on the other hand, is depicted in a ghostly white color with black outlines, wearing a black and white striped shirt, white pants, and white shoes. The ghost's arms are outstretched, and its hands are also clenched into fists. The ghost's face is not visible, and its eyes are black circles. The background of the image is a gradient of pink and teal, with a shadow effect that gives the impression of a light source from the top left corner. The image has a cartoon-like style with exaggerated features and a playful, whimsical atmosphere. There are no texts present in the image.

The image is a meme featuring a cartoon character with a surprised expression, set against a blue background with a watermark that reads "THE". The character is wearing a sailor hat and has a surprised look on their face. To the left of the character, there is a graphic of a woman with long purple hair, wearing a red top and black shorts. The woman is holding a small object in her hand. Above the character, there is a text that reads "Female caregiver fetish caused by neglect". The text is in a bold, capitalized font and is colored black. The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, using a combination of text and imagery to convey a message about the consequences of neglect.

They shouldn't have a system where all the "priests" aren't allowed to have sex.

It just attracts closet queers and sickos...total liars from the get go.

There are VERY FEW TO ZERO men out there who would willingly give up sex for the rest of their lives...for what? The fucking faggot church?

Sex is from God. Normal, healthy sex isn't a sin.

You call a bunch of guys who claim never to have sex preists? I call them liars...and sickos most likely if they make their living selling that lie to others...buncha fags

A PROPHET Wed 25 Feb 2026 10:44:49 No.42023918 Report

**THE PRAYER OF THE LORD****

1 There is no God before Him, and before Him did no God come,

2 Before All, there was One who prayed to the Most High,

3 and therein found Himself,

4 The Lord was sufficient.

**ALL THINGS BELONG TO HIM****

5 But He never ceased in His prayer, lest He grow arrogant.

6 Alas, before Him did no God come, as the ages passed away.

7 With a humble heart He dedicated Himself to a monumental task.

8 That He may create a true marvel, but remain undefined by it.

9 It was in this desire that He learned His true name.
10 That He is Jealous.

**THAT HE MAY BE THE LORD****

11 In his Jealousy, He authored a cosmos most remarkable,
12 and yet hid His face from the creatures He gave drive to find Him, 13 He is the Creator whence from all things came,
14 And He gave us the will to try and tame and define Him,
15 And He gave us the experiences we needed to place our faith in Him,
16 Except it was not Him, but merely His artifice, 17 that He may author a truly marvelous story,
18 truly, His story.

**WHY WE ARE HERE****

19 Truly, I beg the one who asks of the Lord, 'Why?',
20 to consider such a time as to realize the absurdity of the request,
21 for even your very pleas and prayers are authored by Him,
22 but so too is the comfort in distance from Him,
23 so He allows you to have an experience of your own,
24 that you may not mistake yourself for Him,
25 but remember that you are you,
26 simply within His power,
27 and His will is ALWAYS done.

2The Lord of spirits sat upon the throne of his glory.

And the spirit of righteousness was poured out over him.

The word of his mouth shall destroy all the sinners and all the ungodly, who shall perish at his presence.

In that day shall all the kings, the princes, the exalted, and those who possess the earth, stand up, behold, and perceive, that he is sitting on the throne of his glory; that before him the saints shall be judged in righteousness;

And that nothing, which shall be spoken before him, shall be spoken in vain.

THOS IS FOR YOU WHICH DOING MAGIC.

After this there was a great perturbation on earth, and a voice was heard from heaven. I fell down on my face, when my great-grandfather Enoch came and stood by me.
5He said to me, Why have you cried out to me with a bitter cry and lamentation?
6A commandment has gone forth from the Lord against those who dwell on the earth, that their end may come; for they know every secret of the angels, every oppressive and secret power of the devils, 100 and every power of those who commit sorcery, as well as of those who make molten images in the whole earth.
7They know how silver is produced from the dust of the earth, and how on the earth the metallic drop exists; for lead and tin are not produced from earth, as the primary fountain of their production.
8There is an angel standing upon it, and that angel struggles to prevail.
9Afterwards my great-grandfather Enoch seized me with his hand, raising me up, and saying to me, Go, for I have asked the Lord of spirits respecting this perturbation of the earth; who replied, On account of their impiety have their innumerable judgments been consummated before me. Respecting the moons have they inquired, and they have known that the earth will perish with those who dwell upon it, 101 and that to these there will be no place of refuge for ever.
10They have discovered secrets, and they are those who have been judged.

After this he gave me the characteristical marks of all the secret things in the book of my great-grandfather

Enoch, and in the parables which had been given to him;

inserting them for me among the words of the book of parables.

At that time holy Michael responded and said to Raphael, The power of the spirit hurries me away, and impels me on. The severity of the judgment, of the secret judgment of the angels, who is capable of beholding—the endurance of that severe judgment which has taken place and been made permanent—without being melted at the sight of it?

Again holy Michael responded and said to holy Raphael, Who is there whose heart is not softened by it, and whose reins are not troubled at this thing?

Judgment has gone forth against them by those who have thus dragged them away; and that was, when they stood in the presence of the Lord of spirits.

In like manner also holy Rakaël said to Raphael, They shall not be before the eye of the Lord; since the Lord of spirits has been offended with them; for they have conducted themselves as if they were the Lord. Therefore he will bring upon them a secret judgment for ever and ever.

For neither shall angel nor man receive a portion of it;
but they alone shall receive their own judgment for ever end ever

Different degrees of complexity in frameworks cater to different individuals with the degree of coherence needed to integrate said frameworks. If you want something with little to no mental masturbation and novelty driven complexity maybe you should try something like goetia. I don't mean solomonic goetia, i mean original hellenistic necromancy/spiritism, where the term goetia originated. Their systems were pretty organic and practical, i think it's a good interface if you dislike overengineered systems. If you don't mind chthonic magic.

that is a video of Lucifer demonstrating his knowledge of the Logos. recall how in most all creation myths, the first belief existed, then the first thought, then the first spoken word, then the first light, then the creation of all inert matter. the first thought was spoken using the Logos, the divine language, which was motivated by the first belief.

in khaotic magic (not that faggy brit chaos shit), it relies on that fundamental aspect. compared to other systems which rely on appeasing a diety like satan, or some sort of magic system derived from whatever came *after* the Logos. by definition, the khaos is the place from which all things are formed, not a place of tempest and storms. since we can only know a tiny fraction of the Logos, from which all languages are derived, we can only understand khaotics to a limited degree, and therefore have limited results.

as with many magic systems, belief is the axiom. some state that explicitly, like voodoo, which if they person believes the curse enough, they in fact do die. is that cause by belief induced stress? often times, yes, but also just as often the peer pressure belief. I did the dictiomancy/cubomancy thread to good results that way, and am improving it to better pump the existing beliefs of the querent I am performing a reading for, but also to install some temporary, yet plausible, beliefs in them during the read.

what makes metakhaotics interesting is that I personally do not need to belive in any of it- they do. so long as the person being read during the cubomancy session believes it all enough, emphasized by my pitter patter and chitter chatter routine, then it tends to get better results, objectively.

that is what is important- objectively. my little system has no room for interpretation, sanitized the inputs of calculation noise, and provides an objective view of the read from the querent to see no hidden bullshit to change the outcome of the read. I also have to make use of their semiotic preload, but hey, whatever. this is a fuckin blog post as it is. if you want to know more, hit me up and we can chat.

the whole point of chaos magick (sissy shit), and metakhaotics (for the sophisticated person) is to offload the need for belief from the person performing the metakhaotic work to the believers. I don't need to believe in any of their magic systems because, by definition, the khaos is the primordial matter from which all things have flowed and will flow. what shape the khaos takes as it flows into reality is based on the thoughts of the persons extracting from it. if an mechanically inclined person has thoughts through his whole life to make a street racing hot rod, then at some point, his accumulated thoughts will have extracted some amount from the khaos and converted it into thoughts, words, and actions. whether or not he is good at being a mechanic and designing a good car is not the concern of the khaos. sure, the mechanic cannot extract from the khaos as if it is some sort of magic pool, but that it the ultimate source of all things in form of thought and matter.

blah blah blah. if you want to chat about it, I'll keep the thread up. the whole point of khaotics is that you don't have to believe, and it is far better if you believe in nothing, leaving that up to the other people.

The image depicts a black hole in space, surrounded by a swirling, dark space filled with stars and nebulae. The black hole is the central focus of the image, with a bright, white ring of light emanating from its center. This light is likely the light of a star that has been captured by the black hole's gravity, creating a bright ring around the black hole. The background is a deep blue, with a hint of white stars and nebulae scattered throughout. The image is a digital rendering, and the style is realistic with a focus on the black hole and its immediate surroundings. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image.

that's pretty much it. the dictionary I am using is totally biased towards certain thoughts. there are several pages of definitions about truth, fidelity, stuff like that all due to sequencing by letter and all the root word stuff. not so many definitions about other stuff like socks... seems that just wasn't important to them.

it is sort of like a magic 8 ball, except instead of being super vague, there is a variety of sort of vague and maybe relevant to the question stuff. the whole pitter patter stuff is typical stagecraft woo woo, but also to prevent noise in the signals like timestamps, dice throws, stuff like that which actually does cause fuckups like certain pages showing up way too often. the thing is, when people are having a hard time making a decision, if you force them into it by coin tossing them into a decision, heads or tails, and they agree to whatever happens, you can cover the coin after catching it and ask them which one they want more. they've already made the decision, the coin toss forced them, at that last moment, to admit they wanted one choice more than the other, forcing them to stop being a little bitch. similar little mental tricks if a person asks if their dead lover is happy, and they backfit the results into what they want, and I wash my hands of the whole thing.

brain placebo, but the hard part is getting a paragraph back from them about how relevant it was. one guy asked about if he would ever rekindle a flame, and he talked himself into the right decision to cut bait and move on. that's all this stuff is, forcing them into little mental trickfucks to get them to use their head. religions do the same, just much more complex.

I just remebered a scene from some Phil K Dick book. his character had gotten arrested and sent to the county mental ward on a hold because of some stuff he said to the police which they took as crazy. the psychologist told him that he had magic alcohol which had flowers dipped in it, along with a true story of some ol timer psychologist who used to do that, and the patient would believe in it, because the doctor said so, and then they cured themselves of their mental problems. the main character knew it was bullshit, did it anyway, and it fuckin worked.

there is a difference between believing the bullshit and deciding to play along with it for a little bit.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spheres\_trilogy

Sloterdijk talks about how this is the basis for our entire social structure. magic circles and football stadiums are just places where we decide to believe in some arbitrary bullshit rules about some paint on the grass, a ball kicked through a goal, some points on a board, and money being betted out, alongside all the super hot sluts prancing around to show off. after that, they stop pretending, which is like a behaviorial placebo. just like seances, it didn't matter if a ghost actually showed up, if everyone was willing to tell each other that the emperor was wearing the finest silk gowns, then why not say fuck it and go along knowing it's bullshit just to see the results? sort of like a mental laxative. thanks for reading my blog post. fuck my fuckin life.

cool. thanks for that. I'll read up more on Mesmer. the first I read about him was set in a kook context. since having read Sloterdijk and how he points out that the "power of belief" is not necessarily something which people can use to overcome illness (sometimes), scale mountains (sometimes), etc... rather it is the power of what belief can do to people. fuck man, if you can get enough people to believe enough bullshit, you can get them to build spaceships and put bases on the moon. besides, it is either using the carrot/whip to motivate them, or paint fun time imagination picture in their heads about some cartoon nonsense to have them enlist in the military to get and get hamburgered by an illiterate goatfucker. it's like a prime mover with a universal adapter attached.

I think that was the angle Mesmer played. he probably believed a little bit of his own bullshit, but it was more important his patients did. man's gotta eat.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a man with a serious expression. The man appears to be middle-aged, with a mustache and a beard. He is wearing a suit and tie. The background is out of focus, but it suggests an indoor setting, possibly a room with a window.

Overlaying the image is a quote in white text that reads, "A lie told often enough becomes the truth." The text is centered and appears to be a direct quote from Vladimir Lenin, as indicated by the website www.geckolnaly.com in the bottom right corner. The style of the image is reminiscent of a historical or political poster, with a focus on the quote and the man's serious expression.

As a user of this website, it is almost certain you have demonic forces attached to you. If you are, in any fashion, an unironic /pol/ fascist, then you almost certainly have demonic entities which are attached to you / have taken interests in you. Their relationship to you is not one of anything resembling "love". They feel about you the way a person at a restaurant may feel about the cheeseburger they're about to bite into. You need to learn to feel compassion. And my strong recommendation is to attend Episcopalian, or Catholic, Church services. However I do not agree with the Catholic doctrine surrounding masturbation as a mortal sin and believe this constitutes a major fundamental problem with the Church, which will not alter it's doctrine on this matter because for centuries it has held its prescriptions for salvation as infallible.

The nature of any entity/spirit is always relational fundamentally. So, did you ask for anything while offering something or giving something up? The thought alone counts, and you don't need to ask to anyone specifically, the mere act of asking opens the door for spirits that seek stability through the law of affordance.

Try to remember if you recently opened that door, then closing it is as simple as opening it.

AI Overview

To say a novena, you pray a specific set of prayers, often to a saint or for a particular intention, for nine consecutive days, typically once a day, to build a rhythm of focused prayer and ask for intercession, drawing from the apostles' nine days of prayer before Pentecost. You can find specific prayers for saints like St. Jude or St. Anthony, or themes like for the deceased, and some novenas might involve the same prayer daily, while others have unique prayers for each day, all centered on perseverance and faith.

Steps to Pray a Novena:

Choose Your Intention: Decide what you are praying for (e.g., guidance, help for a loved one, a specific need).

Find Your Prayers: Locate a novena prayer for your chosen intention or saint (e.g., St. Jude, St. Anthony, Holy Spirit).

Pray for Nine Days: Dedicate time each day for nine days in a row to say the prayers.

Follow the Structure:

Some novenas repeat the same prayer daily (like the Lord's Prayer, Hail Mary, Glory Be, plus specific novena prayers).

Others have different prayers or meditations for each of the nine days.

Focus on the Goal: The purpose is to focus prayer, show perseverance, and deepen your connection to God, not as a transaction, but as an act of faith.

Examples of Novenas:

St. Jude Novena: For lost causes and desperate situations, often prayed before his feast day (Oct 28) but also used in times of great need.

Holy Spirit Novena: To ask for guidance and protection, mirroring the apostles' prayer before Pentecost.

Novena for the Dead: To pray for the souls of deceased loved ones.

Remember to approach prayer with an open heart, trusting in God's will, rather than expecting specific outcomes like a formula.

This Gnostic Philosophy Explains Ezekiel's Vision of the ...

Merkabah mysticism is an ancient form of Jewish mysticism (c. 100 BCE - 1000 CE) focused on visionary ascents through heavenly realms to experience the divine Throne of God, or Chariot (Merkabah), inspired by the prophet Ezekiel's vision. Practitioners used asceticism, hymns, divine names, and rituals to navigate dangerous angelic gates (Hekhalot) to achieve ecstatic visions, gain wisdom, and even transform into fiery beings. This early tradition, detailed in Hekhalot literature, predates Kabbalah and involved "descenders to the chariot" (Yordei Merkabah) exploring the divine realms and encountering angelic guardians.

Key Aspects of Merkabah Mysticism

Origin & Inspiration: Rooted in Ezekiel's vision (Ezekiel 1) of a divine chariot and four-winged creatures, inspiring mystics to re-enact this journey.

Goal: To achieve ecstatic, visionary experiences of the heavenly palaces (Hekhalot) and the Throne of God.

Practitioners: Called Yordei Merkabah (descenders to the chariot), they were shaman-like figures exploring the divine world.

Methods (Praxis):

Ascetic practices (fasts, special diets).

Recitation of hymns, divine names, and incantations.

Specific bodily postures and cleansing rituals.

Active visualization and meditation.

The Journey: Mystics navigated a multi-tiered heaven, passed fearsome angels by knowing secret seals/passwords, and gained control over angelic powers.

Experiences: Visions of the divine body, transformation into fiery beings, and receiving divine wisdom.

** Literature**: Recorded in Hekhalot (Palace) literature, describing the descent, dangers, and techniques.

Significance: An early form of Jewish mysticism, distinct from but influencing later Kabbalah, focusing on experiential encounters with the divine.

Sefer Raziel HaMalakh (Hebrew: ספר רזיאל המלאך, "the book of Raziel the angel") is a grimoire of Practical Kabbalah from the Middle Ages written primarily in Hebrew and Aramaic. The version of the book published in 1701 is the most known version. Liber Razielis Archangeli, its 13th-century Latin translation produced under Alfonso X of Castile, also survives.

Textual history

Like other obscure ancient texts such as the Bahir and Sefer Yetzirah, Sefer HaRaziel has been extant in a number of versions. The book cannot be shown to predate the 13th century, but may in parts date back to late antiquity insofar as its title is mentioned in another magical work of late antiquity: The Sword of Moses.

The book claims to have been revealed to Adam by the angel Raziel. Critical historians regard it as a medieval work, most probably originating among the Ashkenazi Hasidim, as citations reliant on the main body content of the work as we receive it begin to appear only in the 12th century. At least one section was available to Ibn Ezra before 1153, when he finished his commentary to Exodus.[1] The likely compiler of the medieval version is Eleazar of Worms, as Sefer Galei Razia, which developed into what we have now as Sefer Raziel, including more writings written by people of various theological opinions.[2] According to Jacob Emden, it was compiled by Abraham Abulafia.

Sefer Raziel HaMalakh draws heavily on Sefer Yetzirah and Sefer HaRazim "Book of Secrets". There are multiple manuscript versions, containing up to seven tractates. The printed version of Sefer Raziel is divided into five books, some of it in the form of a mystical midrash on Creation. It features an elaborate angelology, magical uses of the zodiac, gematria, names of God, protective spells, and a method of writing magical healing amulets.

Book six of the Liber Razielis, the latin version of the book, is based on Sefer haRazim, with various additions, including the "Prayer of Adam" of Sefer Adam.

The book became notorious in German Renaissance magic, named together with Picatrix as among the most abominable works of necromancy by Johannes Hartlieb. The prayer of Adam is paraphrased by Nicholas of Cusa in two sermons (Sermo I, 4, 16.25; Sermo XX, 8, 10-13) and further made use of by Johann Reuchlin in his De Arte Cabalistica. [3] Konrad Bollstatter in the 15th century also shows awareness of the Latin version of the "Prayer of Adam" an interpolation in Cgm 252, although he replaces Raziel with Raphael and Seth with Sem. [4]

Tree of Knowledge

Adam, in his prayer to God, apologized for listening to his wife Eve, who was deceived by the snake into eating from the Tree of Knowledge. According to the Book of Raziel, God sent the highest of the angels, Raziel, to teach Adam the spiritual laws of nature and life on Earth, including the knowledge of the planets, stars and the spiritual laws of creation.

The angel Raziel also taught Adam the knowledge of the power of speech, the power of thoughts and the power of a person's soul within the confines of the physical body and this physical world, basically teaching the knowledge with which one can harmonize physical and spiritual existence in this physical world.

The angel Raziel teaches the power of speech, the energy contained within the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet, their combinations and meanings of names.

Adam and Abraham

According to Jewish traditions, the angel Raziel was sent to Earth to teach Adam as he prayed for guidance after the fall, and then returned to teach Abraham spiritual knowledge and laws because he had an elevated soul. The Book of Raziel explains everything from astrology to how the creative life energy starts with a thought from the spiritual realms, prior to manifestation as speech and action in this physical world. The eternal divine creative life energy of this earth is love, the book explains the spiritual laws of birth, death, reincarnation of the soul, and many spiritual laws of "change".

Heptameron

The Heptameron, ascribed to Petrus de Apono, is based on the Book of Raziel.[5]

AI Overview

Advaita Vedanta is a prominent Hindu philosophical tradition emphasizing non-duality (Advaita), asserting that the individual soul (Atman) is identical to the ultimate reality (Brahman) and that the perceived world of separate objects and selves is an illusion (Maya), ultimately unreal from the absolute perspective. Championed by Adi Shankara, it seeks self-realization through practices like listening (Shravana), contemplation (Manana), and meditation (Nididhyasana) to recognize this oneness, leading to liberation (Moksha) from suffering.

Core Concepts

Brahman: The single, ultimate, unchanging reality, pure consciousness.

Atman: The individual self or soul, which is identical to Brahman.

Maya: The cosmic illusion that makes the one Brahman appear as the manifold world and individual selves.

Jiva (Individuality): Appears real due to ignorance (avidya) but is ultimately illusory, a projection of Brahman.

Nirguna Brahman: Brahman without attributes (formless, unconditioned).

Saguna Brahman: Brahman with attributes, worshipped as God (like Isvara) for devotional purposes.

Key Teachings

"Tat Tvam Asi" (Thou Art That): A core Vedic teaching signifying the direct identity between the individual self (you) and the ultimate reality (That/Brahman).

Three Levels of Reality: Subjective (Pratibhasika), empirical (Vyavaharika), and ultimate (Paramarthika).

Non-Duality of Brahman: Brahman has no internal divisions, similarities, or dissimilarities; it is a homogenous, partless reality.

Path to Liberation (Moksha)

Shravana: Listening to the teachings from a qualified teacher (Guru).

Manana: Contemplating and reasoning about the teachings to remove doubts.

Nididhyasana: Meditating on the truth until it becomes a direct, lived experience, realizing one's true nature as Brahman.

Historical Context

Rooted in the Upanishads, its systematic development is attributed to figures like Gaudapada, Mandana Misra, and most notably, Adi Shankara (8th-9th century CE).

It's one of the six orthodox (Āstika) Hindu philosophies (darśanas).

What people are saying

Why is it often claimed that Buddhism and Advaita Vedānta reach the same final truth?

Popular comment · Why is it often claimed that Buddhism and Advaita Vedānta reach the same final truth? Greg Goode, who teaches both Advaita Vedanta and Buddhist Madhyamaka wrote about this once: I wrote this yesterday for the Dharma Connection group, and maybe it's relevant here too (it has some edits for this group). It's in response to someone who was claiming that all paths, including Advaita and Madhyamika, truly lead to the same truth, the same realization. Sometimes when people confront a lot of different paths, they get a sense of cognitive dissonance. They feel like they have to make that tension go away by landing on a judgment about paths or goals as truly "the same" or "different." But how can that really be? So, about Advaita and Madhyamika.....

We can certainly say that they share an overall soteriological goal: freedom from suffering, happiness, compassion, love. The heart wants to say "SAME" here. That's understandable, and I feel that deeply. But beyond that, the mechanics, concepts, and languaging are very different, even on the surface. Something [edited out name] said makes a lot of sense, and it has extremely radical consequences: "Certain views lead to certain realizations. Other views lead to other realizations. Realization is dependent on view." If realizations can affect views, then views can affect realizations. The views of Advaita and Madhyamika are quite different. In fact, Madhyamika owes much of its presentation to the rejection of essential nature and absolute truth that Advaita proposes. The two paths could not be more different on this. Even the "ultimate truth" in Buddhism does not map to the Absolute Truth in Advaita, though there has been a perennialist effort to combine the two into a master Vedantic meta-view for about a century. Perennialism began as long ago as the 15th century with Neoplatonism, and was appropriated by Christian exclusivism. In the last century we've seen Swami Vivekananda, Rene Guenon, Frithjof Schuon, Ananda Coomaraswamy, Madame Blavatsky, Aldous Huxley, and the New Age movement opt for "inherent sameness." The resulting view is much more Advaita-like than Buddhist-like, which corresponds with the favored view of the perennialist proponents most of the time. The Buddhist side would not insist on either "inherently same" or "inherently different." The Buddhists would be more like, "You do your thing, we'll do ours. Let's just all be kind to each other." I even remember hearing a story about the Dalai Lama giving emptiness teachings. Someone in the audience asked him, "What about Brahman and all the Vedantins who study that? Are you saying that emptiness is true and Brahman is mistaken?" He thought for a moment and replied, "Brahman – that is their business. Emptiness – that is our business." So I think it is not helpful to try to stand in a neutral place and compare the truths or the metaphysics of these teachings. We can't do it. Where would we find a neutral place? We can give a Madhyamika interpretation of Advaita or an Advaitin interpretation of Madhyamika. Or a comparative religion-style story about them. Or an everyday psychological assessment of both paths, if we have had experiences in both. But to try to give a metaphysical comparison and ordering and ranking of views from a place that is "neutral" or "impartial" or "unaffected by views" cannot be done. Comparisons and ordering and ranking and assessments are never neutral, but always themselves dependent upon certain standards. And standards are dependent upon views. It SEEMS possible to do make these assessments neutrally, but that's only if we are blind to the emptiness of view, blind to how our conceptual or experiential assessment is already conceptually implicated in some view or another. In my experience reading so many of these essays and posts, the comparative efforts usually (not always) tend to favor the perennialist view, resulting in a kind of projection and imperialism of the "mine."

An Advantage of Advaita Vedanta vis-a-vis Mahayana Buddhism

Popular comment · I have explored both. In my opinion, you are missing the reason why the Buddhists are hesitant to accept any permanent transcendental existence. It's because of their doctrine of emptiness, which lends to their doctrine of dependent arising. For this reason, the concept of the Buddha Mind is controversial and often expressed hesitantly. Meanwhile Vedanta is direct in its assertion. Sarvam kalvidam brahma.

In Advaita Vedanta, what exactly is Brahman — is it pure consciousness, pure being, or something beyond both?

Popular comment · Being (sat) and consciousness (cit) are identical in Advaita. So what is called Brahman is that supreme or pure consciousness. Existence itself.

Adi Shankara, the most prominent exponent of Advaita Vedānta tradition.

"I am other than name, form and action.

My nature is ever free!

I am Self, the supreme unconditioned Brahman.

I am pure Awareness, always non-dual."

Adi Shankara, Upadesasahasri 11.7[1]

Advaita Vedānta (/ˈʌdˈvɑːtə vɛˈdɑːntə/; Sanskrit: अद्वैत वेदान्त, IAST: Advaita Vedānta) is a Hindu tradition of Brahmanical textual exegesis and philosophy, and a monastic institutional tradition nominally related to the Daśanāmi Sampradaya and propagated by the Smārta tradition. Its core tenet is that jivatman, the individual experiencing self, is ultimately pure awareness mistakenly identified with the body and its senses[2] and with thought-constructs,[3] and non-different from Ātman/Brahman, the highest Self or Reality.[4][5][6][note 1] The term Advaita (अद्वैत) literally means "not-two"[7][8] or "one without a second,"[8] which means that only Brahman, 'the one', is ultimately real while prapañca, 'the second', 'the world' or the multiplicity of thought-constructs, is not fully real.[9] It is commonly rendered as "nonduality,"[10][11] and popularly interpreted as meaning that Atman is non-different from Brahman, and often equated with monism. [note 2]

Advaita Vedānta is a Hindu sādhanā, a path of spiritual discipline and experience.[note 3] It states that moksha (liberation from 'suffering' and rebirth)[12][13] is attained through knowledge of Brahman, recognizing the illusoriness of the phenomenal world and disidentification from body-mind and the notion of 'doership',[note 4] and by acquiring vidyā (knowledge)[14] of one's true identity as Atman/Brahman,[1][15][16][17] self-luminous (svayam prakāśa)[note 5] awareness or Witness-consciousness.[18][note 6]

This knowledge is acquired through Upanishadic statements such as tat tvam asi, "that['s how] you are," which destroy the ignorance (avidyā) regarding one's true identity by revealing that (jiv)Ātman is non-different from immortal[note 7] Brahman.[note 1]

The Advaita vedanta tradition modifies the Samkhya-dualism between Purusha (pure awareness or consciousness) and Prakriti ('nature', which includes matter but also cognition and emotion) as the two equal basic principles of existence.[19][20] It proposes instead that Atman/Brahman (awareness, purusha) alone is ultimately real and, though unchanging,[21] is the cause and origin of the transient phenomenal world (prakriti). In this view, the jivatman or individual self is a mere reflection or limitation of singular Ātman in a multitude of apparent individual bodies.[22] It regards the material world as an illusory appearance (maya) or "an unreal manifestation (vivarta) of Brahman,"[23] the latter as proposed by the 13th century scholar Prakasatman of the Vivarana school.[24]

Advaita Vedanta is often presented as an elite scholarly tradition belonging to the orthodox Hindu Vedānta[note 8] tradition, emphasizing scholarly works written in Sanskrit;[25] as such, it is an "iconic representation of Hindu religion and culture." [26] Yet contemporary Advaita Vedanta is yogic Advaita, a medieval and modern syncretic tradition incorporating Yoga and other traditions, and producing works in vernacular.[25] The earliest Advaita writings are the Sannyasa Upanishads (first centuries CE), the Vākyapadīya, written by Bhartṛhari (second half 5th century,[27]) and the Māndūkya-kārikā written by Gauḍapāda (7th century).[28] Gaudapada adapted philosophical concepts from Buddhism, giving them a Vedantic basis and interpretation.[29] The Buddhist concepts were further Vedanticised by Adi Shankara (8th c. CE), who is generally regarded as the most prominent exponent of the Advaita Vedānta tradition,[30] [31][32][33] though some of the most prominent Advaita-propositions come from other Advaitins, and his early influence has been questioned.[34][35][note 9] Adi Shankara emphasized that, since Brahman is ever-present, Brahman-knowledge is immediate and requires no 'action' or 'doership', that is, striving (to attain) and effort.[36][37][38] Nevertheless, the Advaita tradition, as represented by Mandana Misra and the Bhamati school, also prescribes elaborate preparatory practice, including contemplation of mahavakyas,[37][39][40][41][note 9] presenting a tension between sudden and gradual approaches which is also recognized in other spiritual disciplines and traditions.[37][42] [note 10]

Sri Shankaracharya, also known as Adi Shankara, was an important Indian philosopher and spiritual teacher who actively promoted Advaita Vedanta. His teachings on non-duality and the unity of all things have had a significant impact on Indian philosophy and spirituality.

Shankaracharya's prominence as the exemplary defender of traditional Hindu-values and spirituality started to take shape only centuries later, in the 14th century, with the ascent of Sringeri matha and its jagadguru Vidyaranya (Madhava, 14th cent.) in the Vijayanagara Empire,[note 11] While Adi Shankara did not embrace Yoga,[43] the

Advaita-tradition by then had accepted yogic samadhi as a means to still the mind and attain knowledge, explicitly incorporating elements from the yogic tradition and texts like the Yoga Vasistha and the Bhagavata Purana,[44] culminating in Swami Vivekananda's full embrace and propagation of Yogic samadhi as an Advaita means of knowledge and liberation.[45][46] In the 19th century, due to the influence of Vidyanaraya's Sarvadarśanasāṅgraha,[47] the importance of Advaita Vedānta was overemphasized by Western scholarship,[48] and Advaita Vedānta came to be regarded as the paradigmatic example of Hindu spirituality, despite the numerical dominance of theistic Bhakti-oriented religiosity.[49][50][48][note 9] In modern times, Advaita views appear in various Neo-Vedānta movements.[51]

Etymology and nomenclature

Etymology

The word Advaita is a composite of two Sanskrit words:

Prefix "a-" (अ), meaning "non-"

"Dvaita" (द्वैत), which means 'duality' or 'dualism'. [web 1]

Advaita is often translated as "non-duality," but a more apt translation is "non-secondness." [4] Fabian Volker, following Paul Hacker explains that dvaita does not mean "duality," but "the state in which a second is present," synonymous with prapanca, "conceptual proliferation," and with jagat, "the world." Advaita thus means that only Brahman, 'the one', is ultimately real, while the world with its multiplicity, 'the second', is not fully real. [9] As Gaudapada states, when the unreal is taken as real, people grasp to the unreal, which is samsara. By realizing one's true identity as Brahman, there is no more grasping, and the mind comes to rest. [52]

In a popular sense, advaita is often expressed as the famous diction that Atman is Brahman, meaning that jivatman, the individual experiencing self, is ultimately pure awareness mistakenly identified with body and the senses, [53] and non-different ("na aparāha") from Ātman/Brahman, the highest Self or Reality; [4][5][6][note 1]; the knowledge of this true identity is liberating.

The word Vedānta is a composition of two Sanskrit words: The word Veda refers to the whole corpus of vedic texts, and the word "anta" means 'end'. From this, one meaning of Vedānta is "the end of the Vedas" or "the ultimate knowledge of the Vedas". Veda can also mean "knowledge" in general, so Vedānta can be taken to mean "the end, conclusion or finality of knowledge". Vedānta is one of six orthodox schools of Hindu philosophy.

Advaita Vedanta

While "a preferred terminology" for Upanisadic philosophy "in the early periods, before the time of Shankara" was Puruṣavāda, [54][note 12] the Advaita Vedānta school has historically been referred to by various names, such as Advaita-vada (speaker of Advaita), Abheda-darshana (view of non-difference), Dvaita-vada-pratisedha (denial of dual distinctions), and Kevala-dvaita (non-dualism of the isolated).[55] It is also called māyāvāda by Vaishnava opponents, akin to Madhyamaka Buddhism, due to their insistence that phenomena ultimately lack an inherent essence or reality.[56][57][58][59]

"Advaita" (अद्वैत) is from Sanskrit roots a, not; dvaita, "customarily translated as dual." [9] As Advaita, it is usually translated as "not-two" [7][8] or "one without a second", [8] and most commonly as "nondualism", "nonduality" or "nondual," invoking the notion of a dichotomy. Fabian Volker, following Paul Hacker explains that dvaita does not mean "duality," but "the state in which a second is present," the second here being synonymous with prapanca, "conceptual proliferation," and with jagat, "the world." Advaita thus means that only Brahman, 'the one', is ultimately real, while the phenomenal world, or the conceptual multiplicity, 'the second', is not fully real. [9] The term thus does not emphasize two instances, but the notion that the second instance is not fully real, and advaita is better translated as "that which has no second beside it" instead of "nonduality," denying multiplicity and the proliferation of concepts "that tend to obscure the true state of affairs." [9][note 13]

According to Richard King, a professor of Buddhist and Asian studies, the term Advaita first occurs in a recognizably Vedantic context in the prose of Mandukya Upanishad. [55] According to Frits Staal, a professor of philosophy specializing in Sanskrit and Vedic studies, the word Advaita itself is from the Vedic era, and the Vedic sage Yajnavalkya (8th or 7th-century BCE [61][62]) is credited to be the one who coined it. [63] Stephen Phillips, a professor of philosophy and Asian studies, translates the Advaita containing verse excerpt in Brihadaranyaka Upanishad, as "An ocean, a single seer without duality becomes he whose world is Brahman." [note 15]

Advaita tradition

While the term "Advaita Vedanta" in a strict sense may refer to the scholastic tradition of textual exegesis established by Shankara and the monastic institutions, "advaita" in a broader sense may refer to a broad current of advaitic thought, which incorporates advaitic elements with yogic thought and practice and other strands of Indian religiosity, such as Kashmir Shaivism and the Nath tradition. [65] The first connotation has also been called "Classical Advaita" [33][66] and "doctrinal Advaita," [67] and its presentation as such is due to mediaeval doxographies, [46] the influence of Orientalist Indologists like Paul Deussen, [68] and the Indian response to colonial influences, dubbed neo-Vedanta by Paul Hacker, who regarded it as a deviation from "traditional" Advaita Vedanta. [33] Yet, post-Shankara Advaita Vedanta incorporated yogic elements, such as the Yoga Vasistha, and influenced other Indian traditions, and neo-Vedanta is based on this broader strand of Indian thought. [33] This broader current of thought and practice has also been called "greater Advaita Vedanta," [25] "vernacular advaita," [33] and "experiential Advaita." [67] It is this broader advaitic tradition which is commonly presented as "Advaita Vedanta," though the term "advaitic" may be more apt. [33][note 16]

Monism

See also: Metaphysics and Ontology

The nondualism of Advaita Vedānta is often regarded as an idealist monism.[note 2] According to King, Advaita Vedānta developed "to its ultimate extreme" the monistic ideas already present in the Upanishads.[note 17] In contrast, states Milne, it is misleading to call Advaita Vedānta "monistic," since this confuses the "negation of difference" with "conflation into one." [69] Advaita is a negative term (a-dvaita), states Milne, which denotes the "negation of a difference," between subject and object, or between perceiver and perceived.[69]

According to Deutsch, Advaita Vedānta teaches monistic oneness, however without the multiplicity premise of alternate monism theories.[70] According to Jacqueline Suthren Hirst, Adi Shankara positively emphasizes "oneness" premise in his Brahma-sutra Bhasya 2.1.20, attributing it to all the Upanishads.[71]

Nicholson states Advaita Vedānta contains realistic strands of thought, both in its oldest origins and in Shankara's writings.[72]

Soteriology: moksha – liberating knowledge of Brahman
Knowledge is liberating

Ramana Maharshi, the Indian sage who is widely regarded as a Jivanmukta

See also: Jnana, Prajna, and Prajñānam Brahma

The soteriological goal, in Advaita, is to gain self-knowledge as being in essence (Atman), awareness or witness-consciousness, and complete understanding of the real identity of jivan-ātman as Brahman.[1] Correct knowledge of Atman and Brahman is the attainment of Brahman, immortality,[73] and leads to moksha (liberation) from suffering[note 18] and samsara, the cycle of rebirth.[1] This is stated by Shankara as follows:

I am other than name, form and action.

My nature is ever free!

I am Self, the supreme unconditioned Brahman.

I am pure Awareness, always non-dual.

—Adi Shankara, Upadesasahasri 11.7, [1]

According to Advaita Vedānta, liberation can be achieved while living, and is called Jivanmukti.[74][75][note 19] in contrast to Videhamukti (moksha from samsara after death) in theistic sub-schools of Vedānta.[76][better source needed] The Atman-knowledge, that is the knowledge of true Self and its relationship to Brahman is central to this liberation in Advaita thought.[note 20] Atman-knowledge, to Advaitins, is full awareness that everything is Brahman.[78][79][note 21]

According to Anantanand Rambachan, in Advaita, this state of liberating self-knowledge includes and leads to the understanding that "the self is the self of all, the knower of self sees the self in all beings and all beings in the self." [80]

Attaining vidyā (knowledge)

Main article: Jnana Yoga

Advaita Vedānta regards the liberated state of being Atman/Brahman as one's true identity and inherent to being human. According to Shankara and the Vivarana-school, no human action can 'produce' this liberated state, as it is what one already is. [37] As Swami Vivekananda stated:

The Vedas cannot show you Brahman, you are That already. They can only help to take away the veil that hides truth from our eyes. The cessation of ignorance can only come when I know that God and I are one; in other words, identify yourself with Atman, not with human limitations. The idea that we are bound is only an illusion [Maya]. Freedom is inseparable from the nature of the Atman. This is ever pure, ever perfect, ever unchangeable.

—Adi Shankara's commentary on Fourth Vyasa Sutra, Swami Vivekananda [81]

According to Shankara, taking a subitist position, [82] moksha is attained at once when the mahavakyas, articulating the identity of Atman and Brahman, are understood. [83] [38] [note 22]

Yet, the Advaita-tradition also emphasizes human effort, a path of Jnana Yoga with a progression of study and training to realize one's true identity as Atman/Brahman and attain moksha. [37] [39] [40] According to the contemporary Advaita tradition, knowledge of Atman/Brahman is obtained gradually, by svādhyāya, study of the self and of the Vedic texts, which consists of four stages of samanyasa: virāga ('renunciation'), sravana ('listening to the teachings of the sages'), manana ('reflection on the teachings') and nididhyāsana, introspection and profound and repeated meditation on the mahavakyas, selected Upanishadic statements such as tat tvam asi ('that art thou' or 'you are That') which are taken literal, and form the srutic evidence for the identity of jivanatman and Atman/Brahman. [84] [85] [web 4] This meditation negates the misconceptions, false knowledge, and false ego-identity, rooted in maya, which obfuscate the ultimate truth of the oneness of Brahman, and one's true identity as Atman/Brahman. [86] This culminates in what Adi Shankara refers to as anubhava, immediate intuition, a direct awareness which is construction-free, and not construction-filled. It is not an awareness of Brahman, but instead an awareness that is Brahman. [87] Although the threefold practice is broadly accepted in the Advaita tradition, and affirmed by Mandana Misra, [88] it is at odds with Shankara, [89] who took a subitist position. [82]

Sruti (scriptures), proper reasoning and meditation are the main sources of knowledge (vidya) for the Advaita Vedānta tradition. [41] [90] [91] It teaches that correct knowledge of Atman and Brahman is achievable by svādhyāya, [92] study of the self and of the Vedic texts, and three stages of practice: sravana (perception, hearing), manana (thinking) and nididhyāsana (meditation), [41] a three-step methodology that is rooted in the teachings of chapter 4 of the Brihadaranyaka Upanishad. [93] [94]

According to critics of neo-Advaita, which also emphasizes direct insight, traditional Advaita Vedanta entails more than self-inquiry or bare insight into one's real nature, but also includes self-restraint, textual studies and ethical perfection. It is described in classical Advaita books like Shankara's Upadesasahasri[95] and the Vivekachudamani, which is also attributed to Shankara.

Preparation: the fourfold qualities

The Advaita student has to develop the fourfold qualities,[96] or behavioral qualifications (Samanyasa, Sampattis, sādhana-catustaya):[97][98][99][note 23] A student in Advaita Vedānta tradition is required to develop these four qualities:

Nityānitya vastu viveka (नित्यानित्य वस्तु विवेकम्) – Viveka is the ability to correctly discriminate between the real and eternal (nitya) and the substance that is apparently real, illusory, changing and transitory (anitya).[97][84]

Ihāmutrārtha phala bhoga virāga (इहाऽमुत्रार्थ फल भोगविरागम्) – The renunciation (virāga) of all desires of the mind (bhoga) for sense pleasures, in this world (iha) and other worlds. Willing to give up everything that is an obstacle to the pursuit of truth and self-knowledge.[84][100]

Śamādi ṣaṭka sampatti (शमादि षट्क सम्पत्ति) – the sixfold virtues or qualities:

Śama – mental tranquility, ability to focus the mind.[84][100]

Dama – self-restraint,[note 24] the virtue of temperance.[84][100] restraining the senses. Uparati – dispassion, lack of desire for worldly pleasures, ability to be quiet and disassociated from everything;[84] discontinuation of all religious duties and ceremonies[100]

Titikṣa – endurance, perseverance, putting up with pairs of opposites (like heat and cold, pleasure and pain), ability to be patient during demanding circumstances[84][100]

Śraddhā – having faith in teacher and the Sruti scriptural texts[84]

Samādhāna – contentedness, satisfaction of mind in all conditions, attention, intentness of mind[84][100]

Mumukṣutva (मुमुक्षुत्वम्) – An intense longing for freedom, liberation and wisdom, driven to the quest of knowledge and understanding. Having moksha as the primary goal of life[84][96]

The threefold practice: sravana (hearing), manana (thinking) and nididhyasana (meditation)

The Advaita tradition teaches that correct knowledge, which destroys avidya, psychological and perceptual errors related to Atman and Brahman,[16] is obtained in jñānayoga through three stages of practice,[98] sravana (hearing), manana (thinking) and nididhyasana (meditation).[41] This three-step methodology is rooted in the teachings of chapter 4 of the Brihadaranyaka Upanishad:[93][94]

Sravana, which literally means hearing. The student listens and discusses the ideas, concepts, questions and answers.[41][93] of the sages on the Upanishads and Advaita Vedānta, studying the Vedantic texts, such as the Brahma Sutras, aided by discussions with the guru (teacher, counsellor).[97][104][41]

Manana refers to thinking on these discussions and contemplating over the various ideas based on svadhyaya and sravana.[93][104][105] It is the stage of reflection on the teachings.[93][104]

Nididhyāsana, the stage of meditation and introspection.[84][web 5] This stage of practice aims at realization and consequent conviction of the truths, non-duality and a state where there is a fusion of thought and action, knowing and being.[106][93]

Although the threefold practice is broadly accepted in the Advaita tradition, Shankara's works show an ambivalence toward it: while accepting its authenticity and merits, as it is based in the scriptures, he also takes a subitist position,[82] arguing that moksha is attained at once when the mahavakyas, articulating the identity of Atman and Brahman, are understood.[83][38][note 25] According to Rambachan, "it is not possible to reconcile Sankara's views with this seemingly well-ordered system."[89]

Mandana Misra, on the other hand, explicitly affirms the threefold practice as the means to acquire knowledge of Brahman, referring to meditation as dhyana.[107] He states that these practices, though conceptual, 'can eliminate both ignorance and conceptuality at the same time, leaving only the "pure, transparent nature" of self-awareness'.[108]

Bilimoria states that these three stages of Advaita practice can be viewed as sadhana practice that unifies Yoga and Karma ("action," referring here to ritual) ideas, and was most likely derived from these older traditions.[109][104]

Guru

Main article: Guru

Advaita Vedānta school has traditionally had a high reverence for a Guru (teacher), and recommends that a competent Guru be sought in one's pursuit of spirituality, though this is not mandatory.[110] Reading of Vedic literature and reflection is the most essential practice.[110] Adi Shankara, states Comans, regularly employed compound words "such as Sastracaryopadesa (instruction by way of the scriptures and the teacher) and Vedāntacaryopadesa (instruction by way of the Upanishads and the teacher) to emphasize the importance of Guru".[110] According to Comans, this reflects the Advaita tradition which holds a competent teacher as important and essential to gaining correct knowledge, freeing oneself from false knowledge, and to self-realization.[111]

Nevertheless, in the Bhamati-school the guru has a less essential role, as he can explain the teachings, but the student has to venture its further study.[112]

A guru is someone more than a teacher, traditionally a reverential figure to the student, with the guru serving as a "counselor, who helps mold values, shares experiential knowledge as much as literal knowledge, an exemplar in life, an inspirational source and who helps in the spiritual evolution of a student.[113] The guru, states Joel Mlecko, is more than someone who teaches specific type of knowledge, and includes in its scope someone who is also a "counselor, a sort of parent of mind and soul, who helps mold values and experiential knowledge as much as specific knowledge, an exemplar in life, an inspirational source and who reveals the meaning of life." [113]

Pramana (means of knowledge)

Main article: Epistemology in Advaita Vedanta

In classical Indian thought, pramana (means of knowledge) concerns questions like how correct knowledge can be acquired; how one knows, how one doesn't; and to what extent knowledge pertinent about someone or something can be acquired.[114][115] In contrast to other schools of Indian philosophy, early Vedanta paid little attention to pramana.[116] The Brahmasutras are not concerned with pramana, and pratyaksa (sense-perception) and anumana (inference) refer there to sruti and smriti respectively. [116] Shankara recognized the means of knowledge,[117][note 26] but his thematic focus was upon metaphysics and soteriology, and he took for granted the pramanas. [122] For Shankara, sabda is the only means of knowledge for attaining Brahman-jnana. [123] According to Sengaku Mayeda, "in no place in his works [...] does he give any systematic account of them,"[122] taking Atman/Brahman to be self-evident (svapramanaka) and self-established (svatahsiddha), and "an investigation of the means of knowledge is of no use for the attainment of final release." [122]

Nevertheless, the Advaita tradition accepts altogether six kinds of pramāṇas.[124][125] [126][123] While Adi Shankara emphasized Śabda (शब्द), relying on word, testimony of past or present reliable experts with regard to religious insights,[115][127][124][128] and also accepted pratyakṣa (प्रत्यक्षाय), perception; and anumāṇa (अनुमान), inference; classical Advaita Vedānta, just like the Bhatta Purvamimamsaka school, also accepts upamāṇa (उपमान), comparison, analogy; arthāpatti (अर्थापत्ति), postulation, derivation from circumstances;[115][129] and anupalabdhi (अनुपलब्धि), non-perception, negative/cognitive proof.[127][124]

Samadhi

According to Dubois, Shankara's Advaita emphasizes that, since Brahman is ever-present, Brahman-knowledge is immediate and requires no 'action', that is, striving and effort;[36] yet, the contemporary Advaita tradition, which is a yogic Advaita synthesis which developed in the late mediaeval period, also prescribes elaborate preparatory practice, including yogic samadhi, posing a paradox which is also recognized in other spiritual disciplines and traditions.[130][42][note 10]

Shankara regarded the srutis as the means of knowledge of Brahman, and he was ambivalent about yogic practices and meditation, which at best may prepare one for Brahma-jnana.[web 6] According to Rambachan, criticising Vivekananda, Shankara states that the knowledge of Brahman can only be obtained from inquiry of the Shruti, and not by Yoga or samadhi, which at best can only silence the mind.[131] The Bhamati school and the Vivarana school differed on the role of contemplation, but they both "deny the possibility of perceiving supersensuous knowledge through popular yoga techniques." [132] Later Advaita texts like the Dṛg-Dṛśya-Viveka (14th century) and Vedāntasara (of Sadananda) (15th century) added samādhi as a means to liberation, a theme that was also emphasized by Swami Vivekananda.[44] The Vivekachudamani, traditionally attributed to Shankara but post-dating him,[133] "conceives of nirvikalpa samadhi as the premier method of Self-realization over and above the well-known vedantic discipline of listening, reflection and deep contemplation." [65] Koller states that yogic concentration is an aid to gaining knowledge in Advaita.[134]

Anubhava ('experience')

The role of anubhava, anubhuti ("experience," "intuition"[135]) as "experience" in gaining Brahman-jnana is contested. While neo-Vedanta claims a central position for anubhava as "experience," Shankara himself regarded reliance on textual authority as sufficient for gaining Brahman-jnana,[136][note 27] "the intuition of Brahman,"[135] and used anubhava interchangeably with pratipatta, "understanding".[137] Arvind Sharma argues that Shankara's own "direct experience of the ultimate truth" guided him in selecting "those passages of the scriptures that resonate with this experience and will select them as the key with which to open previously closed, even forbidden, doors." [138][note 28]

The Vivekachudamani "explicit[ly] declar[es] that experience (anubhuti) is a pramana, or means of knowing (VCM 59)," [65] and neo-Vedanta also accepts anubhava ("personal experience") as a means of knowledge.[139] Dalal and others state that anubhava does not center around some sort of "mystical experience," but around the correct knowledge of Brahman.[91][140] Nikhalananda concurs, stating that (knowledge of) Atman and Brahman can only be reached by buddhi, "reason," [141] stating that mysticism is a kind of intuitive knowledge, while buddhi is the highest means of attaining knowledge.[142]

Adhyaropa Apavada - imposition and negation

See also: Neti Neti

Since Gaudapada,[143] who adopted the Buddhist four-cornered negation which negates any positive predicates of 'the Absolute',[144][145][note 29] a central method in Advaita Vedanta to express the inexpressable is the method called Adhyaropa Apavada. [143] In this method, which was highly estimated by Satchidanandendra Saraswati, a property is imposed (adhyaropa) on Atman to convince one of its existence, whereafter the imposition is removed (apavada) to reveal the true nature of Atman as nondual and undefinable.[147] In this method, "That which cannot be expressed is expressed through false attribution and subsequent denial." [148] As Shankara writes, "First let me bring them on the right path, and then I will gradually be able to bring them round to the final truth afterwards." [148] For example, Atman, the real "I," is described as witness, giving "it" an attribute to separate it from non-self. Since this implies a duality between observer and observed, next the notion of "witness" is dropped, by showing that the Self cannot be seen and is beyond qualifications, and only that what is remains, without using any words:[web 7]

After one separates oneself i.e. 'I' or Atman from the sense objects, the qualities superimposed on Self are also negated by saying that which not being and not non-being, cannot be described by words, without beginning and end (BG 13.32) or as in Satyam Jnanam Anantam Brahman, beyond words, beyond mind and speech, etc. Here there is an attempt to negate the earlier attribute like being witness, bliss, most subtlest, etc. After this negation of false superimposition, Self Alone shines. One enters into the state of Nirvikalp Samadhi, where there is no second, no one to experience and hence this state cannot be described in words.[web 7]

The Mahavakyas - the identity of Ātman and Brahman

Moksha, liberation from suffering and rebirth and attaining immortality, is attained by disidentification from the body-mind complex and gaining self-knowledge as being in essence Atman, and attaining knowledge of the identity of Atman and Brahman.[1][73] According to Shankara, the individual Ātman and Brahman seem different at the empirical level of reality, but this difference is only an illusion, and at the highest level of reality they are really identical.[149] The real self is Sat, "the Existent," that is, Atman/Brahman.[150][151][note 1] Whereas the difference between Atman and non-Atman is deemed self-evident, knowledge of the identity of Atman and Brahman is revealed by the shruti, especially the Upanishadic statement tat tvam asi.

Mahavakyas

According to Shankara, a large number of Upanishadic statements reveal the identity of Atman and Brahman. In the Advaita Vedanta tradition, four of those statements, the Mahavakyas, which are taken literal, in contrast to other statements, have a special importance in revealing this identity.[86][152] They are:

तत्त्वमसि, tat tvam asi, Chandogya VI.8.7. Traditionally rendered as "That Thou Art" (that you are),[153][154][155] with tat in Ch.U.6.8.7 referring to sat, "the Existent"[156][19][157]; correctly translated as "That's how [thus] you are,"[153][155][158] with tat in Ch.U.6.12.3, its original location from where it was copied to other verses,[153] referring to "the very nature of all existence as permeated by [the finest essence]"[159][160] अहं ब्रह्मास्मि, aham brahmāsmi, Brhadāranyaka I.4.10, "I am Brahman," or "I am Divine." [161]

प्रज्ञानं ब्रह्म, prajñānam brahma, Aitareya V.3, "Prajñānam[note 30] is Brahman." [note 31] अयमात्मा ब्रह्म, ayamātmā brahma, Mandukya II, "This Atman is Brahman."

That you are

The longest chapter of Shankara's Upadesasahasri, chapter 18, "That Art Thou," is devoted to considerations on the insight "I am ever-free, the existent" (sat), and the identity expressed in Chandogya Upanishad 6.8.7 in the mahavakya (great sentence) "tat tvam asi", "that thou art." [164][165] In this statement, according to Shankara, tat refers to 'Sat,[165] "the Existent"[156][19][166][167] Existence, Being,[web 9] or Brahman,[168] the Real, the "Root of the world,"[165][note 32] the true essence or root or origin of everything that exists.[19][166][web 9] "Tvam" refers to one's real I, pratyagatman or inner Self,[169] the "direct Witness within everything,"[18] "free from caste, family, and purifying ceremonies,"[170] the essence, Atman, which the individual at the core is.[171][172] As Shankara states in the Upadesasahasri:

Up.I.174: "Through such sentences as "Thou art That" one knows one's own Atman, the Witness of all the internal organs." Up.I.18.190: "Through such sentences as "[Thou art] the Existent" [...] right knowledge concerning the inner Atman will become clearer." Up.I.18.193-194: "In the sentence "Thou art That" [...] [t]he word "That" means inner Atman."[173]

The statement "tat tvam asi" sheds the false notion that Atman is different from Brahman.[174] According to Nakamura, the non-duality of atman and Brahman "is a famous characteristic of Sankara's thought, but it was already taught by Sundarapandya"[175] (c.600 CE or earlier).[176] Shankara cites Sundarapandya in his comments to Brahma Sutra verse I.1.4:

When the metaphorical or false atman is non-existent, [the ideas of my] child, [my] body are sublated. Therefore, when it is realized that 'I am the existent Brahman, atman', how can any duty exist?[177]

From this, and a large number of other accordances, Nakamura concludes that Shankar was not an original thinker, but "a synthesizer of existing Advaita and the rejuvenator, as well as a defender, of ancient learning."[178]

Direct perception versus contemplation of the Mahavakyas

In the Upadesasahasri Shankara, Shankara is ambivalent on the need for meditation on the Upanishadic mahavakya. He states that "right knowledge arises at the moment of hearing,"[38] and rejects prasamcaksa or prasamkhyana meditation, that is, meditation on the meaning of the sentences, and in Up.II.3 recommends parisamkhyana,[179] separating Atman from everything that is not Atman, that is, the sense-objects and sense-organs, and the pleasant and unpleasant things and merit and demerit connected with them.[180] Yet, Shankara then concludes with declaring that only Atman exists, stating that "all the sentences of the Upanishads concerning non-duality of Atman should be fully contemplated, should be contemplated."[181] As Mayeda states, "how they [prasamcaksa or prasamkhyana versus parisamkhyana] differ from each other is not known."[182]

Prasamkhyana was advocated by Mandana Misra,[183] the older contemporary of Shankara who was the most influential Advaitin until the 10th century.[35][184][note 9] "According to Mandana, the mahavakyas are incapable, by themselves, of bringing about brahmajñāna. The Vedānta-vākyas convey an indirect knowledge which is made direct only by deep meditation (prasamkhyana). The latter is a continuous contemplation of the purport of the mahavakyas.[185] Vācaspati Miśra, a student of Mandana Misra, agreed with Mandana Misra, and their stance is defended by the Bhamati-school, founded by Vācaspati Miśra.[186] In contrast, the Vivarana school founded by Prakāśatman (c. 1200–1300)[187] follows Shankara closely, arguing that the mahavakyas are the direct cause of gaining knowledge.[188]

Shankara's insistence on direct knowledge as liberating also differs from the asparsa yoga described in Gaudapada's Mandukyakarika III.39-46.[189] In this practice of 'non-contact' (a-sparśa), the mind is controlled and brought to rest, and does not create

"things" (appearances) after which it grasps; it becomes non-dual, free from the subject-[grasping]-object dualism.[190][52] Knowing that only Atman/Brahman is real, the creations of the mind are seen as false appearances (MK III.31-33). When the mind is brought to rest, it becomes or is Brahman (MK III.46).[189]

Renouncement of ritualism

In the Upadesasahasri Shankara discourages ritual worship such as oblations to Deva (God), because that assumes the Self within is different from Brahman.[note 33][note 34] The "doctrine of difference" is wrong, asserts Shankara, because, "he who knows the Brahman is one and he is another, does not know Brahman".[195][196] The false notion that Atman is different from Brahman[174] is connected with the novice's conviction that (Upadesasaharsi II.1.25)

...I am one [and] He is another; I am ignorant, experience pleasure and pain, am bound and a transmigrator [whereas] he is essentially different from me, the god not subject to transmigration. By worshipping Him with oblation, offerings, homage and the like through the [performance of] the actions prescribed for [my] class and stage of life, I wish to get out of the ocean of transmigratory existence. How am I he?[197]

Recognizing oneself as "the Existent-Brahman," which is mediated by scriptural teachings, is contrasted with the notion of "I act," which is mediated by relying on sense-perception and the like.[198] According to Shankara, the statement "Thou art That" "remove[s] the delusion of a hearer,"[199] "so through sentences as "Thou art That" one knows one's own Atman, the witness of all internal organs,"[200] and not from any actions.[201][note 35] With this realization, the performance of rituals is prohibited, "since [the use of] rituals and their requisites is contradictory to the realization of the identity [of Atman] with the highest Atman." [203]

Philosophy: Reality/truth (Brahman, sat) and the world

The swan is an important motif in Advaita. The white colour of swan symbolises Sattva guṇa & the ability to discern Satya (Real, Eternal) from Mithya (Unreal, Changing), just as the mythical swan Paramahansa discerns milk from water. Classical Advaita Vedānta states that all reality and everything in the experienced world has its root in Brahman, which is unchanging intelligent Consciousness.[4] To Advaitins, there is no duality between a Creator and the created universe.[4][204] All objects, all experiences, all matter, all consciousness, all awareness are somehow also this one fundamental reality Brahman.[4] Yet, the knowing self has various experiences of reality during the waking, dream and dreamless states,[205] and Advaita Vedānta acknowledges and admits that from the empirical perspective there are numerous distinctions.[206] Advaita explains this by postulating different levels of reality,[207][208] [209][205] and by its theory of errors (anirvacaniya khyati).[210][4]

Darśana (view) – central concerns

The ripple, Jivatman, is non-different from the water, Brahman.

Further information: Hindu philosophy

Vedānta is one of the six classical Hindu darśanas, the Indian traditions of religious philosophy and practice which accept the authority of the Vedas. The various schools of Vedanta aim to harmonise the diverging views presented in the Prasthantrayi, the Principal Upanishads,[211][212] along with the Brahma Sutras and the Bhagavad Gitā, offering an integrated body of textual interpretations and religious practices which aim at the attainment of moksha, release or liberation from transmigratory existence.[213][214] [note 36]

Rejection of samkhya-dualism

"Samkhya is not one of the systems of Indian philosophy. Samkhya is the philosophy of India!"

Gopinath Kaviraj[216]

The Brahma Sutras, the constituting text of the Vedanta-tradition, rejects the purusha-prakriti dualism of the samkhya-tradition,[20] and "much of the Brahmasutra appears to have been written to refute the perspective of the Samkhya school." [20] Samkhya postulates two independent primal principles, purusha (primal consciousness) and prakriti (nature, which includes both matter and cognition and emotions). In samkhya, prakriti consists of three qualities (Guṇas), which are in balance, until they come in contact with purusha and the equilibrium is disturbed. From this pradhana then evolves the material universe, distinct from purusha, thereby postulating purusha as the efficient cause of all existence, and prakriti as its material cause or origin.[217]

While closely related to Samkhya,[218][20] the Advaita Vedānta tradition rejects this dualism, instead stating that Reality cannot evolve from an inert, consciousness- and intelligence-less principle or essence. Brahman, which is intelligent and consciousness, [20] is the sole Reality,[219][220] "that from which the origination, subsistence, and dissolution of this universe proceed,"[217] as stated in the second verse of the Brahman Sutras. In Samkhya, purusha is the efficient cause, and prakriti is the material cause: purusha causes prakriti to manifest as the natural world. Advaita, like all Vedanta schools, states that Brahman, consciousness, is both the efficient and the material cause, that from which the material universe evolves.[221] Yet, in the Brahmasutras Brahman is a dynamic force, while the Advaita-tradition regards Brahman as an "essentially unchanging and static reality,"[21] since Brahman changing into something else would mean that Brahman would not exist anymore, while a partial change would leave Brahman divided.[21]

Theoretical difficulties

By accepting that Brahman is the sole, unchanging reality, various theoretical difficulties arise which are not answered by the Brahmasutras, which asserts that the Upanishadic views have to be accepted due to their scriptural authority, "regardless of logical problems and philosophical inconsistencies." [21] Advaita and other Vedānta traditions face several problems, for which they offer different solutions.[222][219][220] According to Deutsch and Dalvi, "The basic problem of Vedanta [is] the relation between the plural, complex, changing phenomenal world and the Brahman in which it substantially subsists." [19] According to Mayeda, following the post-Shankara [20] predicate sat-cit-ananda, three problems emerge. First, how did Brahman, which is sat ('existence'), without any distinction, become manifold material universe? Second, how did Brahman, which is cit ('consciousness'), create the material world? Third, if Brahman is ananda ('bliss'), why did the empirical world of sufferings arise? The Brahma Sutras do not answer these philosophical queries, and later Vedantins including Shankara had to resolve them. [222]

To solve these questions, Shankara introduced the concept of "Unevolved Name-and-Form," or primal matter corresponding to Prakriti, from which the world evolves, [223] coming close to Samkhya dualism. [224] Shankara's notion of "Unevolved Name-and-Form" was not adopted by the later Advaita tradition; instead, the later tradition turned avidya into a metaphysical principle, namely mulavidya or "root ignorance," a metaphysical substance which is the "primal material cause of the universe (upadana)." [225] In this view, Brahman alone is real, and the phenomenal world is an appearance (maya) or "an unreal manifestation (vivarta) of Brahman." [23] Prakasatmans (13th c.) defense of vivarta to explain the origin of the world, which declared phenomenal reality to be an illusion, [24] became the dominant explanation, with which the primacy of Atman/Brahman can be maintained. [219][220]

Relation between jivatman and Atman/Brahman

A main question in all schools of Vedanta is the relation between the individual self (jiva) and Atman/Brahman. [226] As Shankara and his followers regard Atman/Brahman to be the ultimate Real, jivanatman is "ultimately [to be] of the nature of Atman/Brahman." [219] [6] This truth is established from a literal reading of selected parts [86] of the oldest Principal Upanishads and Brahma Sutras, and is also found in parts of the Bhagavad Gitā and numerous other Hindu texts, [4] and is regarded to be self-evident. [134] [note 37] Great effort is made to show the correctness of this reading, and its compatibility with reason and experience, by criticizing other systems of thought. [134] Vidya, correct knowledge or understanding of the identity of jivan-ātman and Brahman, destroys or makes null avidya ('false knowledge'), and results in liberation. [228] [note 38]

Three levels of Reality/truth

See also: Three Bodies Doctrine (Vedanta) and Two truths doctrine

Shankara proposes three levels of reality, using sublation as the ontological criterion: [207][208][209]

Pāramārthika (paramartha, absolute), the Reality that is metaphysically true and ontologically accurate. It is the state of experiencing that "which is absolutely real and into which both other reality levels can be resolved". This reality is the highest; it can't be sublated (assimilated) by any other. [207][229] Ultimate reality only consists of Brahman. Everything else is like a dream. [230]

Vyāvahārika (vyavahara), or samvriti-saya, [231] consisting of the empirical or pragmatical reality. It is ever changing over time, thus empirically true at a given time and context but not metaphysically true. It is "our world of experience, the phenomenal world that we handle every day when we are awake". It is the level in which both jiva (living creatures or individual Selves) and Iswara are true; here, the material world is also true but this is incomplete reality and is sublatale.[229][232] Vyāvahārika reality results from superimposing ignorance on Brahman, like seeing a snake instead of a rope.[230] Prātibhāsika (pratibhasika, apparent reality, unreality), "reality based on imagination alone". It is the level of experience in which the mind constructs its own reality. Well-known examples of pratibhasika is the imaginary reality such as the "roaring of a lion" fabricated in dreams during one's sleep, and the perception of a rope in the dark as being a snake.[229][233][234]

Absolute and relative reality are valid and true in their respective contexts, but only from their respective particular perspectives.[205][206][235] John Grimes explains this Advaita doctrine of absolute and relative truth with the example of light and darkness. [206] From the sun's perspective, it neither rises nor sets, there is no darkness, and "all is light". From the perspective of a person on earth, sun does rise and set, there is both light and darkness, not "all is light", there are relative shades of light and darkness. Both are valid realities and truths, given their perspectives. Yet, they are contradictory. What is true from one point of view, states Grimes, is not from another. To Advaita Vedānta, this does not mean there are two truths and two realities, but it only means that the same one Reality and one Truth is explained or experienced from two different perspectives.[206][236]

As they developed these theories, Advaita Vedānta scholars were influenced by some ideas from the Nyaya, Samkhya and Yoga schools of Hindu philosophy.[237][209] These theories have not enjoyed universal consensus among Advaitins, and various competing ontological interpretations have flowered within the Advaita tradition.[4][238][note 39]

Pāramārthika - Sat (True Reality)

Ātman

Main article: Ātman (Hinduism)

Ātman (IAST: ātman, Sanskrit: आत्मन्) is the "real self"[239][240][241][242][note 40] or "essence"[web 11][note 41] of the individual. It is caitanya, Pure Consciousness,[243] a consciousness, states Sthaneshwar Timalsina, that is "self-revealed, self-evident and self-aware (svaprakashata),"[242] and, states Payne, "in some way permanent, eternal, absolute or unchanging." [note 41] It is self-existent awareness, limitless and non-dual. [78] It is "a stable subjectivity, or a unity of consciousness through all the specific states of individuated phenomenality." [244] Ātman, states Eliot Deutsch, is the "pure, undifferentiated, supreme power of awareness", it is more than thought, it is a state of being, that which is conscious and transcends subject-object divisions and momentariness.[245] According to Ram-Prasad, "it" is not an object, but "the irreducible essence of being [as] subjectivity, rather than an objective self with the quality of consciousness." [246]

According to Shankara, it is self-evident and "a matter not requiring any proof" that Atman, the 'I', is 'as different as light is from darkness' from non-Atman, the 'you' or 'that', the material world whose characteristics are mistakenly superimposed on Atman, resulting in notions as "I am this" and "This is mine." [247] One's real self is not the constantly changing body, not the desires, not the emotions, not the ego, nor the dualistic mind, [248][249][250] but the introspective, inwardly self-conscious "on-looker" (saksi), [251] which is in reality completely disconnected from the non-Atman. [247]

The jivatman or individual self is a mere reflection of singular Atman in a multitude of apparent individual bodies. [22] It is "not an individual subject of consciousness," [244] but the same in each person and identical to the universal eternal Brahman, [79] a term used interchangeably with Atman. [252]

Atman is often translated as soul, [note 42] though the two concepts differ significantly, since "soul" includes mental activities, whereas "Atman" solely refers to detached witness-consciousness.

Three states of consciousness and Turiya

Advaita posits three states of consciousness, namely waking (jagrat), dreaming (svapna), deep sleep (susupti), which are empirically experienced by human beings, [253][254] and correspond to the Three Bodies Doctrine: [255]

The first state is the waking state, in which we are aware of our daily world. [256] This is the gross body.

The second state is the dreaming mind. This is the subtle body. [256]

The third state is the state of deep sleep. This is the causal body. [256]

Advaita also posits "the fourth," Turiya, which some describe as pure consciousness, the background that underlies and transcends these three common states of consciousness. [web 12][web 13] Turiya is the state of liberation, where states Advaita school, one experiences the infinite (ananta) and non-different (advaita/abheda), that is free from the dualistic experience, the state in which ajativada, non-origination, is apprehended. [257] According to Candradhara Sarma, Turiya state is where the foundational Self is realized, it is measureless, neither cause nor effect, all pervading, without suffering, blissful, changeless, self-luminous, [note 5] real, immanent in all things and transcendent. [258] Those who have experienced the Turiya stage of self-consciousness have reached the pure awareness of their own non-dual Self as one with everyone and everything, for them the knowledge, the knower, the known becomes one, they are the Jivanmukta. [259][260][261][262][263]

Advaita traces the foundation of this ontological theory in more ancient Sanskrit texts. [264] For example, chapters 8.7 through 8.12 of Chandogya Upanishad discuss the "four states of consciousness" as awake, dream-filled sleep, deep sleep, and beyond deep sleep. [264][265] One of the earliest mentions of Turiya, in the Hindu scriptures, occurs in verse 5.14.3 of the Brihadaranyaka Upanishad. [note 43] The idea is also discussed in other early Upanishads.[266]

Svayam prakāśa (self-luminosity)

Brahma Jnanavali Mala, attributed to Adi Shankara:[web 14]

6. I am the indwelling consciousness, I am calm (free from all agitation), I am beyond prakriti (maya), I am of the nature of eternal bliss, I am the very Self, indestructible and changeless.

14. I am a mass of awareness and of consciousness. I am not a doer nor an experiencer. I am the very Self, indestructible and changeless.

Manisha Panchakam, attributed to Adi Shankara:[web 15]

Main article: Prakāśa

See also: Svasaṃvedana

In the Advaita tradition, consciousness is svayam prakāśa, "self-luminous,"[4][267][note 5] which means that "self is pure awareness by nature." [268] According to Dasgupta, it is "the most fundamental concept of the Vedānta." [269] According to T. R. V. Murti, the Vedānta concept is explained as follows:

The point to be reached is a foundational consciousness that is unconditional, self-evident, and immediate (svayam-prakāśa). It is that to which everything is presented, but is itself no presentation, that which knows all, but is itself no object. The self should not be confused with the contents and states which it enjoys and manipulates. If we have to give an account of it, we can describe it only as what it is not, for any positive description of it would be possible only if it could be made an object of observation, which from the nature of the case it is not. We "know" it only as we withdraw ourselves from the body with which we happen to be identified, in this transition.[270][note 44]

According to Jonardon Ganeri, the concept was introduced by the Buddhist philosopher Dignāga (c.480–c.540 CE), and accepted by the Vedānta tradition;[268] according to Zhihua Yao, the concept has older roots in the Mahasanghika school.[271]

Brahman

Main articles: Brahman and Satcitananda

According to Advaita Vedānta, Brahman is the true Self, consciousness, awareness, intelligent, possessed with will, and the only Reality (Sat).[77][272][273][note 45] Brahman is Paramarthika Satyam, "Absolute Truth"[274] or absolute Real.[275] It is That which is unborn and unchanging,[272][276] and immortal.[note 7] Other than Brahman, everything else, including the universe, material objects and individuals, are ever-changing and therefore maya. Brahman is "not sublatale", [77] which means it cannot be superseded by a still higher reality:[277]

the true Self, pure consciousness [...] the only Reality (sat), since It is untinged by difference, the mark of ignorance, and since It is the one thing that is not sublatale".

[77]

In Advaita, Brahman is the substrate and cause of all changes.[272][276] Refuting samkhya, which considers pradhana or prakriti the material cause (primal matter) and purusha the efficient cause,[278] in Advaita Vedanta Brahman is considered to be the material cause[note 46] and the efficient cause[note 47] of all that exists.[279][280][281] The Brahma Sutras I.1.2 state that Brahman is:

...that from which the origination, subsistence, and dissolution of this universe proceed.

Advaita's Upanishadic roots state Brahman's qualities[note 49] to be Sat-cit-ānanda, [284][285][286] "true being-consciousness-bliss,"[286][287] or "Eternal Bliss Consciousness".[288][note 50] A distinction is made between nirguna Brahman, formless Brahman, and saguna Brahman, Brahman with form, that is, Ishvara, God. Nirguna Brahman is undescrivable, and the Upanishadic neti neti ('not this, not that' or 'neither this, nor that') negates all conceptualizations of Brahman.[85][289]

Vyāvahārika (conventional reality) – Avidya and Māyā
Avidyā (ignorance)

Avidyā is a central tenet of Shankara's Advaita, and became the main target of Ramanuja's criticism of Shankara.[290][291] In Shankara's view, avidyā is adhyasa, "the superimposition of the qualities of one thing upon another." [292] As Shankara explains in the Adhyasa-bhasya, the introduction to the Brahmasutrabhasya:

Owing to an absence of discrimination, there continues a natural human behaviour in the form of 'I am this' or 'This is mine'; this is avidya. It is a superimposition of the attributes of one thing on another. The ascertainment of the nature of the real entity by separating the superimposed thing from it is vidya (knowledge, illumination).

Due to avidya, we're steeped in loka drsti, the empirical view.[293] From the beginning we only perceive the empirical world of multiplicity, taking it to be the only and true reality.[293][294] Due to avidyā there is ignorance, or nescience, of the real Self, Atman/Brahman, mistakenly identifying the Self with the body-mind complex.[web 16] With parmartha drsti ignorance is removed and vidya is acquired, and the Real, distinctionless Brahman is perceived as the True reality.[293]

The notion of avidyā and its relationship to Brahman creates a crucial philosophical issue within Advaita Vedānta thought: how can avidyā appear in Brahman, since Brahman is pure consciousness?[295] For Shankara, avidya is a perceptual or psychological error.[225] According to Satchidanandendra Saraswati, for Shankara "avidya is only a technical name to denote the natural tendency of the human mind that is engaged in the act of superimposition." [296] The later tradition diverged from Shankara by turning avidya into a metaphysical principle, namely mulavidya or "root ignorance," a metaphysical substance which is the "primal material cause of the universe (upadana)," thereby setting aside Shankara's 'Unevolved Name-and-Form' as the explanation for the existence of materiality.[225][297] According to Mayeda, "[i]n order to save monism, they characterized avidya as indefinable as real or unreal (sadasadbhyam anirvacanya), belonging neither to the category of being nor to that of non-being." [225] In the 20th century, this theory of mulavidya became a point of strong contention among Advaita Vedantins, with Satchidanandendra Saraswati arguing that Padmapada and Prakasatman had misconstrued Shankara's stance.[298]

Shankara did not give a 'location' of avidya, giving precedence to the removal of ignorance.[299][note 51] Sengaku Mayeda writes, in his commentary and translation of Adi Shankara's Upadesasahasri:

Certainly the most crucial problem which Sankara left for his followers is that of avidyā. If the concept is logically analysed, it would lead the Vedanta philosophy toward dualism or nihilism and uproot its fundamental position.[300]

The later Advaita-tradition diverged from Shankara, trying to determinate a locus of avidya,[301] with the Bhamati-school locating avidya in the jiva c.q. prakriti, while the Vivarana-school locates it in Brahman.[302][301]

Māyā (appearance)

In Advaita Vedanta, the perceived empirical world, "including people and other existence," is Māyā, "appearance." [303][304] Jiva, conditioned by the human mind, is subjected to experiences of a subjective nature, and misunderstands and interprets the physical, changing world as the sole and final reality.[303] Due to avidya, we take the phenomenal world to be the final reality,[web 16] while in Reality only Sat ( True Reality, Brahman) is Real and unchanging.[305]

While Shankara took a realistic stance, and his explanations are "remote from any connotation of illusion," the 13th century scholar Prakasatman, founder of the influential Vivarana school, introduced the notion that the world is illusory.[24][219][220] According to Hacker, maya is not a prominent theme for Shankara, in contrast to the later Advaita tradition, and "the word maya has for [Shankara] hardly any terminological weight." [306]

Five koshas (sheaths)

Due to avidya, atman is covered by koshas (sheaths or bodies), which hide man's true nature. According to the Taittiriya Upanishad, the Atman is covered by five koshas, usually rendered "sheath".[307] They are often visualized like the layers of an onion. [308] From gross to fine the five sheaths are:

Annamaya kosha, physical/food sheath

Pranamaya kosha, life-force sheath

Manomaya kosha, mental sheath

Vijnanamaya kosha, discernment/wisdom sheath

Anandamaya kosha, bliss sheath (Ananda)

Parinamavada and vivartavada - causality and change

See also: Satkāryavāda, Ajativada, and Vivartavada

Cause and effect are an important topic in all schools of Vedānta.[note 52] Two sorts of causes are recognised, namely Nimitta kāraṇa, the efficient cause, that which causes the existence of the universe, and Upādāna kāraṇa, the material cause, that from which the matter of this universe comes.[310] All schools of Vedānta agree that Brahman is both the material and the efficient cause, and all subscribe to the theory of Satkāryavāda,[web 18] which means that the effect is pre-existent in the cause.[23][note 53]

There are different views on the origination of the empirical world from Brahman. All commentators "agree that Brahman is the cause of the world," but disagree on how exactly Brahman is the cause of the world.[23] According to Nicholson, "Mediaeval Vedāntins distinguished two basic positions." Parinamavada is the idea that the world is a real transformation (parinama) of Brahman.[23] Vivartavada is the idea that the world is merely an unreal manifestation (vivarta) of Brahman. Vivartavada states that although Brahman appears to undergo a transformation, in fact no real change takes place. The myriad of beings are unreal manifestation, as the only real being is Brahman, that ultimate reality which is unborn, unchanging, and entirely without parts.[23]

20th verse of Brahmajñanavalimala, attributed to Shankara:

ब्रह्म सत्यं जगन्मिथ्या
जीवो ब्रह्मैव नापरः

Brahman is real, the world is an illusion
Brahman and Jiva are not different.

Brahmajñanavalimala 1.20[web 20]

The Brahma Sūtras, the ancient Vedāntins, most sub-schools of Vedānta,[23][web 18] as well as Sāṃkhya argue for parinamavada.[web 18] The "most visible advocates of Vivartavada," states Nicholson, are the Advaitins, the followers of Shankara.[23] "Although the world can be described as conventionally real", adds Nicholson, "the Advaitins claim that all of Brahman's effects must ultimately be acknowledged as unreal before the individual self can be liberated".[web 18][note 54]

Yet, Ādi Shankara himself most likely explained causality through parinamavada.[web 18][23][24][312] In Shankara's works "Brahman constitutes the basic essence (svabhava) of the universe (BS Bh 3.2.21) and as such the universe cannot be thought of as distinct from it (BS Bh 2.1.14)." In Shankara's view, then, "The world is real, but only in so far as its existence is seen as totally dependent upon Brahman." [312]

Shankara introduced the concept of "Unevolved Name-and-Form," or primal matter corresponding to Prakriti, from which the world evolves,[223] but this concept was not adopted by the later Advaita tradition.[24] Vivartavada became the dominant explanation, with which the primacy of Atman/Brahman can be maintained.[219][220] Scholars such as Hajime Nakamura and Paul Hacker already noted that Adi Shankara did not advocate Vivartavada, and his explanations are "remote from any connotation of illusion".[24][note 55]

2. I am Brahman (pure consciousness). It is pure consciousness that appears as this universe.

It was the 13th century scholar Prakasatman, who founded the influential Vivarana school, who gave a definition to vivarta, introducing the notion that the world is illusory. It is Prakasatman's theory that is sometimes misunderstood as Adi Shankara's position. [24] Andrew Nicholson concurs with Hacker and other scholars, adding that the vivartavada isn't Shankara's theory, that Shankara's ideas appear closer to parinama-vada, and the vivarta explanation likely emerged gradually in Advaita subschool later.[web 18] [note 56]

Ethics

Some claim, states Deutsch, "that Advaita turns its back on all theoretical and practical considerations of morality and, if not unethical, is at least 'a-ethical' in character".[315] However, Deutsch adds, ethics does have a firm place in this philosophy. Its ideology is permeated with ethics and value questions enter into every metaphysical and epistemological analysis, and it considers "an independent, separate treatment of ethics are unnecessary".[315][316] According to Advaita Vedānta, states Deutsch, there cannot be "any absolute moral laws, principles or duties", instead in its axiological view Atman is "beyond good and evil", and all values result from self-knowledge of the reality of "distinctionless Oneness" of one's real self, every other being and all manifestations of Brahman.[317] Advaitin ethics includes lack of craving, lack of dual distinctions between one's own Self and another being's, good and just Karma.[318]

The values and ethics in Advaita Vedānta emanate from what it views as inherent in the state of liberating self-knowledge. This state, according to Rambachan, includes and leads to the understanding that "the self is the self of all, the knower of self sees the self in all beings and all beings in the self." [80] Such knowledge and understanding of the indivisibility of one's and other's Atman, Advaitins believe leads to "a deeper identity and affinity with all". It does not alienate or separate an Advaitin from his or her community, rather awakens "the truth of life's unity and interrelatedness".[80] These ideas are exemplified in the Isha Upanishad – a sruti for Advaita, as follows:

One who sees all beings in the self alone, and the self of all beings, feels no hatred by virtue of that understanding.

For the seer of oneness, who knows all beings to be the self,
where is delusion and sorrow?

—Isha Upanishad 6–7, Translated by A Rambachan[319]

Adi Shankara, in verse 1.25 to 1.26 of his Upadeśasāhasrī, asserts that the Self-knowledge is understood and realized when one's mind is purified by the observation of Yamas (ethical precepts) such as Ahimsa (non-violence, abstinence from injuring others in body, mind and thoughts), Satya (truth, abstinence from falsehood), Asteya (abstinence from theft), Aparigraha (abstinence from possessiveness and craving) and a simple life of meditation and reflection.[320] Rituals and rites can help focus and prepare the mind for the journey to Self-knowledge,[321] but can be abandoned when moving on to "hearing, reflection, and meditation on the Upanishads." [322]

Elsewhere, in verses 1.26–1.28, the Advaita text Upadesasahasri states the ethical premise of equality of all beings. Any Bheda (discrimination), states Shankara, based on class or caste or parentage is a mark of inner error and lack of liberating knowledge. [323] This text states that the fully liberated person understands and practices the ethics of non-difference.[323]

One, who is eager to realize this highest truth spoken of in the Sruti, should rise above the fivefold form of desire: for a son, for wealth, for this world and the next, and are the outcome of a false reference to the Self of Varna (castes, colors, classes) and orders of life. These references are contradictory to right knowledge, and reasons are given by the Srutis regarding the prohibition of the acceptance of difference. For when the knowledge that the one non-dual Atman (Self) is beyond phenomenal existence is generated by the scriptures and reasoning, there cannot exist a knowledge side by side that is contradictory or contrary to it.

—Adi Shankara, Upadesha Sahasri 1.44, [324][note 57]

Texts

The Upanishads, the Bhagavad Gitā and Brahma Sutras are the central texts of the Advaita Vedānta tradition, lending authority to the doctrines about the identity of Atman and Brahman and their changeless nature.[6][325]

Adi Shankara gave a nondualist interpretation of these texts in his commentaries. Adi Shankara's Bhashya (commentaries) have become central texts in the Advaita Vedānta philosophy, but are one among many ancient and medieval manuscripts available or accepted in this tradition.[32] The subsequent Advaita tradition has further elaborated on these sruti and commentaries. Adi Shankara is also credited for the famous text Nirvana Shatakam.

Prasthanatrayi

The Vedānta tradition provides exegeses of the Upanishads, the Brahma Sutras, and the Bhagavadgita, collectively called the Prasthanatrayi, literally, three sources.[326][6]

[325]

The Upanishads,[note 58] or Śruti prasthāna; considered the Śruti (Vedic scriptures) foundation of Vedānta.[note 59][214][329][330] Most scholars, states Eliot Deutsch, are convinced that the Śruti in general, and the Upanishads in particular, express "a very rich diversity" of ideas, with the early Upanishads such as Brihadaranyaka Upanishad and Chandogya Upanishad being more readily amenable to Advaita Vedānta school's interpretation than the middle or later Upanishads.[331][332] In addition to the oldest Upanishads, states Williams, the Sannyasa Upanishads group composed in pre-Shankara times "express a decidedly Advaita outlook".[333]

The Brahma Sutras, or Nyaya prasthana / Yukti prasthana; considered the reason-based foundation of Vedānta. The Brahma Sutras attempted to synthesize the teachings of the Upanishads. The diversity in the teachings of the Upanishads necessitated the systematization of these teachings. The only extant version of this synthesis is the Brahma Sutras of Badarayana. Like the Upanishads, Brahma Sutras is also an aphoristic text, and can be interpreted as a non-theistic Advaita Vedānta text or as a theistic Dvaita Vedānta text. This has led, states Stephen Phillips, to its varying interpretations by scholars of various sub-schools of Vedānta.[334] The Brahmasutra is considered by the Advaita school as the Nyaya Prasthana (canonical base for reasoning).[335]

The Bhagavad Gitā, or Smṛiti prasthāna; considered the Smṛiti (remembered tradition) foundation of Vedānta.[335] It has been widely studied by Advaita scholars, including a commentary by Adi Shankara.[139][336]

Textual authority

The Advaita Vedānta tradition considers the knowledge claims in the Vedas to be the crucial part of the Vedas, not its karma-kanda (ritual injunctions).[6] The knowledge claims about self being identical to the nature of Atman/Brahman are found in the Upanishads, which Advaita Vedānta has regarded as "errorless revealed truth." [6] Nevertheless, states Koller, Advaita Vedantins did not entirely rely on revelation, but critically examined their teachings using reason and experience, and this led them to investigate and critique competing theories.[6]

Advaita Vedānta, like all orthodox schools of Hindu philosophy, accepts as an epistemic premise that Śruti (Vedic literature) is a reliable source of knowledge.[214][329][330]

The Śruti includes the four Vedas including its four layers of embedded texts – the Samhitas, the Brahmanas, the Aranyakas and the early Upanishads.[337] Of these, the Upanishads are the most referred to texts in the Advaita school.

The possibility of different interpretations of the Vedic literature, states Arvind Sharma, was recognized by ancient Indian scholars.[338][336] The Brahmasutra (also called Vedānta Sutra, composed in 1st millennium BCE) accepted this in verse 1.1.4 and asserts the need for the Upanishadic teachings to be understood not in piecemeal cherry-picked basis, rather in a unified way wherein the ideas in the Vedic texts are harmonized with other means of knowledge such as perception, inference and remaining pramanas.[338][335] This theme has been central to the Advaita school, making the Brahmasutra as a common reference and a consolidated textual authority for Advaita.[338][339]

The Bhagavad Gitā, similarly in parts can be interpreted to be a monist Advaita text, and in other parts as theistic Dvaita text. It too has been widely studied by Advaita scholars, including a commentary by Adi Shankara.[139][336]

Other texts

A large number of texts are attributed to Shankara; of these texts, the Brahma Sutra Bhasya (commentary on the Brahma Sutras), the commentaries on the principal Upanishads, and the Upadesasahasri are considered genuine and stand out.[citation needed]

Post-Shankara Advaita saw the composition of both scholarly commentaries and treatises, as well as, from late mediaeval times (14th century) on, popular works and compositions which incorporate Yoga ideas. These include notable texts mistakenly attributed to Shankara, such as the Vivekachudamani, Atma bodha, and Aparokshanubhuti; and other texts like Advaita Bodha Deepika and Dṛg-Dṛśya-Viveka. Texts which influenced the Advaita tradition include the Avadhuta Gita, the Yoga Vasistha, and the Yoga Yajnavalkya.[citation needed]

Sampradaya and Smarta tradition

Monastic order - Mathas

(Vidyashankara temple) at Sringeri Sharada Peetham, Sringeri

Advaita Vedānta is not just a philosophical system, but also a tradition of monastic renunciation. Philosophy and renunciation are closely related:[web 22]

Most of the notable authors in the advaita tradition were members of the sannyasa tradition, and both sides of the tradition share the same values, attitudes and metaphysics.[web 22]

According to tradition, around 740 AD Gaudapada founded Shri Gaudapadacharya Math[note 60], also known as Kavalē matha. It is located in Kavale, Ponda, Goa,[web 23] and is the oldest matha of the South Indian Saraswat Brahmins.[340][web 24]

Shankara, himself considered to be an incarnation of Shiva,[web 22] is credited with establishing the Dashanami Sampradaya, organizing a section of the Ekadandi monks under an umbrella grouping of ten names.[web 22] Several Hindu monastic and Ekadandi traditions, however, remained outside the organisation of the Dasanāmis.[341][342][343]

Sankara is said to have organised the Hindu monks of these ten sects or names under four Maṭhas (Sanskrit: मठ) (monasteries), called the Amnaya Mathas, with the headquarters at Dvārakā in the West, Jagannatha Puri in the East, Sringeri in the South and Badrikashrama in the North.[web 22] According to tradition, each math was first headed by one of his four main disciples, and the tradition continues since then. Yet, according to Paul Hacker, no mention of the mathas can be found before the 14th century CE.[344] Until the 15th century, the timespan of the directors of Sringeri Math are unrealistically long, spanning 60+ and even 105 years. After 1386, the timespans become much shorter.[345] According to Hacker, these mathas may have originated as late as the 14th century, to propagate Shankara's view of Advaita.[346][note 61][note 62] According to another tradition in Kerala, after Sankara's samadhi at Vadakkunnathan Temple, his disciples founded four mathas in Thrissur, namely Naduvil Madhom, Thekke Madhom, Idayil Madhom and Vadakke Madhom.

Monks of these ten orders differ in part in their beliefs and practices, and a section of them is not considered to be restricted to specific changes attributed to Shankara. While the dasanāmis associated with the Sankara maths follow the procedures attributed to Adi Śankara, some of these orders remained partly or fully independent in their belief and practices; and outside the official control of the Sankara maths. The advaita sampradaya is not a Saiva sect,[web 22][350] despite the historical links with Shaivism. [note 63] Nevertheless, contemporary Sankaracaryas have more influence among Saiva communities than among Vaisnava communities.[web 22]

Smarta Tradition

Main article: Smarta Tradition

The Smarta tradition of Hinduism is a synthesis of various strands of Indian religious thought and practice, which developed with the Hindu synthesis, dating back to the early first century CE.[note 64] It is particularly found in south and west India, and reveres all Hindu divinities as a step in their spiritual pursuit.[352][353][354] Their worship practice is called Panchayatana puja.[355][352] The worship symbolically consists of five deities: Shiva, Vishnu, Devi or Durga, Surya and an Ishta Devata or any personal god of devotee's preference.[353][356]

In the Smarta tradition, Advaita Vedānta ideas combined with bhakti are its foundation. Adi Shankara is regarded as the greatest teacher[354] and reformer of the Smarta.[357] According to Alf Hiltebeitel, Shankara's Advaita Vedānta and practices became the doctrinal unifier of previously conflicting practices with the smarta tradition.[note 65]

Philosophically, the Smarta tradition emphasizes that all images and statues (murti), or just five marks or any anicons on the ground, are visibly convenient icons of spirituality saguna Brahman.[359][355] The multiple icons are seen as multiple representations of the same idea, rather than as distinct beings. These serve as a step and means to realizing the abstract Ultimate Reality called nirguna Brahman. The ultimate goal in this practice is to transition past the use of icons, then follow a philosophical and meditative path to understanding the oneness of Atman (Self) and Brahman – as "That art Thou".

Buddhist influences on Advaita Vedānta

Further information: Buddhist influences on Advaita Vedanta

Similarities with Buddhism

Advaita Vedānta and other schools of Hindu philosophy share numerous terminology, doctrines, and dialectical techniques with Buddhism.[361][362] According to a 1918 paper by the Buddhist scholar O. Rozenberg, "a precise differentiation between Brahmanism and Buddhism is impossible to draw." [361] T. R. V. Murti notices that "the ultimate goal" of Vedānta, Sāṃkhya, and Mahāyāna Buddhism is "remarkably similar"; while Advaita Vedānta postulates a "foundational self", according to Murti "Mahāyāna Buddhism implicitly affirms the existence of a deep underlying reality behind all empirical manifestations in its conception of śūnyatā (the indeterminate, the void), or vijñapti-mātra (consciousness only), or tathātā (thatness), or dhārmata (noumenal reality)." [270] According to Frank Whaling, the similarities between Advaita Vedānta and Buddhism are not limited to the terminology and some doctrines, but also includes practice. The monastic practices and monk tradition in Advaita Vedānta are similar to those found in Buddhism.[363]

Mahāyāna philosophy

The influence of Mahāyāna Buddhism on Advaita Vedānta has been significant.[363] [364] Sharma points out that the early commentators on the Brahma Sūtras were all realists, or pantheist realists. He states that they were influenced by Buddhism, particularly during the 5th–6th centuries CE with the development of the Yogācāra school of Buddhist philosophy.[365] Von Glasenapp states that there was a mutual influence between Vedānta and Buddhism.[note 66] S. N. Dasgupta and Mohanta suggest that Buddhism and Advaita Vedānta represent "different phases of development of the same non-dualistic metaphysics from the Upanishadic period to the time of Śaṅkara." [366][note 67]

The influence of Buddhist doctrines on Gauḍapāda has been a vexed question.[369] [370] Modern scholarship generally accepts that Gauḍapāda was influenced by Buddhism, at least in terms of using Buddhist terminology to explain his ideas, but adds that Gauḍapāda was a Vedantin and not a Buddhist.[369] Ādi Śaṅkara, states Natalia Isaeva, incorporated "into his own system a Buddhist notion of māyā which had not been minutely elaborated in the Upanishads".[361] According to Mudgal, Śaṅkara's Advaita view and Nāgārjuna's Mādhyamaka view of ultimate reality are compatible because they are both transcendental, indescribable, non-dual and only arrived at through a via negativa or neti neti. Mudgal concludes therefore that "the difference between Śūnyavāda philosophy of Buddhism and Advaita philosophy of Hinduism may be a matter of emphasis, not of kind".[371] Similarly, there are many points of contact between the Buddhist Yogācāra school and Śaṅkara's Advaita tradition.[372] According to S. N. Dasgupta, Śaṅkara and his followers borrowed much of their dialectic form of criticism from the Buddhists. His Brahman was very much like the śūnya of Nāgārjuna [...] The debts of Śaṅkara to the self-luminosity[<sup>note 5</sup>] of the Vijñānavāda Buddhism can hardly be overestimated. There seems to be much truth in the accusations against Śaṅkara by Vijñāna Bhikṣu and others that he was a hidden Buddhist himself. I am led to think that Śaṅkara's philosophy is largely a compound of Vijñānavāda and Śūnyavāda Buddhism with the Upanishadic notion of the permanence of self superadded.[373]

Differences from Buddhism

The Advaita Vedānta tradition has historically rejected accusations of crypto-Buddhism highlighting their respective views on Ātman, Anattā, and Brahman.[374] Yet, some early Buddhist texts (1st millennium CE), such as the Mahāyāna Buddhist scriptures Tathāgatagarbha Sūtras suggest "self-like" concepts, variously called Tathāgatagarbha or "Buddha nature".[375][376] In modern era studies, scholars such as Wayman state that these "self-like" concepts are neither self nor sentient being, nor individual soul, nor personality.[377][378] Some scholars posit that the Tathāgatagarbha Sūtras were written to promote Buddhism to non-Buddhists.[379][380][381]

The epistemological foundations of Buddhism and Advaita Vedānta are different. Buddhism accepts two valid means to reliable and correct knowledge—perception and inference, while Advaita Vedānta accepts six (described elsewhere in this article).[124][382][383] However, some Buddhists in history, have argued that Buddhist scriptures are a reliable source of spiritual knowledge, corresponding to Advaita's Śabda pramāṇa, however Buddhists have treated their scriptures as a form of inference method.[384]

Advaita Vedānta posits a substance ontology, an ontology which holds that underlying the change and impermanence of empirical reality is an unchanging and permanent absolute reality, like an eternal substance it calls Ātman/Brahman.[385] In its substance ontology, as like other philosophies, there exist a universal, particulars, and specific properties, and it is the interaction of particulars that create events and processes.[386] In contrast, Buddhism posits a process ontology, also called as "event ontology".[387][386] According to Buddhist philosophy, particularly after the rise of ancient Mahāyāna Buddhist scholarship, the concept of impermanence (anicca) is understood as one of the three marks of existence (trilakṣaṇa):[388] there is neither empirical nor absolute permanent reality, because all phenomena are characterized by their lack of a solid and independent existence (svabhāva), and ontology can be explained as a process.[387][389][<sup>note 68</sup>]

In Buddhist ontology, there is a system of dependent origination and interdependent phenomena (pratītya-samutpāda) but no stable persistent identities, neither eternal universals nor particulars.[388] In Buddhism, thoughts and memories are mental constructions and fluid processes (skandhā) without a real observer, personal agent, or cognizer (anattā).[388] By contrast, in Advaita Vedānta and the other orthodox schools of Hinduism, the eternal, unchanging ultimate self (ātman) identical with Brahman is understood as the real observer, personal agent, and cognizer.[391] However, the historical Buddha considered this Brahmanical belief to be one of the six wrong views about the self; in fact, Buddha held that attachment to the appearance of a permanent self in this world of change is the cause of suffering (duḥkha), and the main obstacle to the attainment of spiritual liberation (mokṣa).[388]

Criticisms of concurring Hindu schools

Some Hindu scholars have criticized Advaita Vedānta for its notion of māyā and non-theistic doctrinal similarities with Buddhism,[392][363] sometimes referring to the Advaita tradition as Māyāvāda.[393]

Bhāskara, a Hindu philosopher of the Bhedabheda Vedānta school (9th century CE), accused Śaṅkara's Advaita tradition as "this despicable broken down Māyāvāda that has been chanted by the Mahāyāna Buddhists", characterizing it as a school that is undermining the ritual duties set in Vedic orthodoxy.[363]

Rāmāṇuja, a Hindu saint and founder of the Vishishtadvaita Vedānta school (12th century CE), similarly accused Ādi Śaṅkara of being a Prachanna Bauddha, that is, a "crypto-Buddhist",[394] and someone who was undermining the theistic Bhakti-oriented devotionalism.[363]

Relationship with other traditions

The Advaita Vedānta ideas, particularly of 8th century Adi Shankara, were challenged by theistic Vedānta philosophies that emerged centuries later, such as the 11th-century Vishishtadvaita (qualified nondualism) of Ramanuja, and the 14th-century Dvaita (theistic dualism) of Madhvacharya.[395] Their application of Vedanta philosophy to ground their faith turned Vedanta into a major factor in India's religious landscape.[396]

Vishishtadvaita

Main article: Vishishtadvaita

Ramanuja's Vishishtadvaita school and Shankara's Advaita school are both nondualism Vedānta schools,[397][398] both are premised on the assumption that all Selfs can hope for and achieve the state of blissful liberation; in contrast, Madhvacharya and his Dvaita subschool of Vedānta believed that some Selfs are eternally doomed and damned.[399] [400] Shankara's theory posits that only Brahman and causes are metaphysical unchanging reality, while the empirical world (Maya) and observed effects are changing, illusive and of relative existence.[401][402] Spiritual liberation to Shankara is the full comprehension and realization of oneness of one's unchanging Atman (Self) as the same as Atman in everyone else as well as being identical to the nirguna Brahman.[398] [403][404] In contrast, Ramanuja's theory posits both Brahman and the world of matter are two different absolutes, both metaphysically real, neither should be called false or illusive, and saguna Brahman with attributes is also real.[402] God, like man, states Ramanuja, has both soul and body, and all of the world of matter is the glory of God's body.[397] The path to Brahman (Vishnu), asserted Ramanuja, is devotion to godliness and constant remembrance of the beauty and love of personal god (saguna Brahman, Vishnu), one which ultimately leads one to the oneness with nirguna Brahman.[397]

Shuddhadvaita

Main article: Shuddhadvaita

Vallabhacharya (1479–1531 CE), the proponent of the philosophy of Shuddhadvaita Brahmvad enunciates that Ishvara has created the world without connection with any external agency such as Maya (which itself is his power) and manifests Himself through the world.[405] That is why shuddhadvaita is known as 'Unmodified transformation' or 'Avikṛta Pariṇāmavāda'. Brahman or Ishvara desired to become many, and he became the multitude of individual Selves and the world. Vallabha recognises Brahman as the whole and the individual as a 'part' (but devoid of bliss).[406]

Dvaita

Main article: Dvaita

Madhvacharya was also a critic of Advaita Vedānta. Advaita's nondualism asserted that Atman (Self) and Brahman are identical (both in bondage and liberation[407]), there is interconnected oneness of all Selves and Brahman, and there are no pluralities.[408][409] Madhva in contrast asserted that Atman (Self) and Brahman are different (both in bondage and liberation[407]), only Vishnu is the Lord (Brahman), individual Selves are also different and depend on Vishnu, and there are pluralities.[408][409] Madhvacharya stated that both Advaita Vedānta and Mahayana Buddhism were a nihilistic school of thought.[410] Madhvacharya wrote four major texts, including Upadhikhandana and Tattvadyota, primarily dedicated to criticizing Advaita.[410]

Followers of ISKCON are highly critical of Advaita Vedānta, regarding it as māyāvāda, identical to Mahayana Buddhism.[web 25][web 26]

Influence on other traditions

Within the ancient and medieval texts of Hindu traditions, such as Vaishnavism, Shaivism and Shaktism, the ideas of Advaita Vedānta have had a major influence.[note 69] Advaita Vedānta influenced Krishna Vaishnavism in the different parts of India.[411] One of its most popular text, the Bhagavata Purana, adopts and integrates in Advaita Vedānta philosophy.[412][413][414] The Bhagavata Purana is generally accepted by scholars to have been composed in the second half of 1st millennium CE.[415][416]

In the ancient and medieval literature of Shaivism, called the Āgamas, the influence of Advaita Vedānta is once again prominent.[417][418][419] Of the 92 Āgamas, ten are Dvaita texts, eighteen are Bhedabheda, and sixty-four are Advaita texts.[420][421] According to Natalia Isaeva, there is an evident and natural link between 6th-century Gaudapada's Advaita Vedānta ideas and Kashmir Shaivism.[422]

Shaktism, the Hindu tradition where a goddess is considered identical to Brahman, has similarly flowered from a syncretism of the monist premises of Advaita Vedānta and dualism premises of Samkhya–Yoga school of Hindu philosophy, sometimes referred to as Shaktadavaitavada (literally, the path of nondualistic Shakti).[423][424][425]

Other influential ancient and medieval classical texts of Hinduism such as the Yoga Yajnavalkya, Yoga Vashishta, Avadhuta Gitā, Markandeya Purana and Sannyasa Upanishads predominantly incorporate premises and ideas of Advaita Vedānta.[426][427][428]

Historiography

The historiography of Advaita Vedanta is coloured by Orientalist notions,[429][note 71] while modern formulations of Advaita Vedānta, which developed as a reaction to western Orientalism and Perennialism[431] have "become a dominant force in Indian intellectual thought." [432] According to Michael S. Allen and Anand Venkatkrishnan, "scholars have yet to provide even a rudimentary, let alone comprehensive account of the history of Advaita Vedānta in the centuries leading up to the colonial period." [433]

Early Vedānta

The Upanishads form the basic texts, of which Vedānta gives an interpretation.[434] The Upanishads do not contain "a rigorous philosophical inquiry identifying the doctrines and formulating the supporting arguments".[435][note 72] This philosophical inquiry was performed by the darsanas, the various philosophical schools.[437][note 73]

The Brahma Sutras of Bādarāyana, also called the Vedānta Sutra,[439] were compiled in its present form around 400–450 CE,[440] but "the great part of the Sutra must have been in existence much earlier than that".[440] Estimates of the date of Bādarāyana's lifetime differ between 200 BCE and 200 CE.[441] The Brahma Sutra is a critical study of the teachings of the Upanishads, possibly "written from a Bhedābheda Vedāntic viewpoint." [web 18] Bādarāyana was not the first person to systematise the teachings of the Upanishads.[442] He refers to seven Vedantic teachers before him.[442]

Early Advaita Vedānta

Two Advaita writings predating Maṇḍana Miśra and Shankara were known to scholars such as Nakamura in the first half of 20th-century, namely the Vākyapadīya, written by Bharṭṛhari (second half 5th century[27]), and the Māndūkya-kārikā written by Gauḍapāda (7th century).[28] Later scholarship added the Sannyasa Upanishads (first centuries CE[443]) to the earliest known corpus, some of which are of a sectarian nature,[444] and have a strong Advaita Vedānta outlook.[445][446][447]

According to Nakamura, "there must have been an enormous number of other writings turned out in this period [between the Brahma Sutras and Shankara], but unfortunately all of them have been scattered or lost and have not come down to us today".[28] In his commentaries, Shankara mentions 99 different predecessors of his Sampradaya.[112] In the beginning of his commentary on the Brhadaranyaka Upanishad Shankara salutes the teachers of the Brahma-vidya Sampradaya.[web 27] Pre-Shankara doctrines and sayings can be traced in the works of the later schools, which does give insight into the development of early Vedānta philosophy.[28]

Gauḍapāda and Māṇḍūkya Kārikā

Main article: Gaudapada

According to tradition, Gauḍapāda (6th century)[448] was the teacher of Govinda Bhagavatpada and the grandteacher of Shankara. Gauḍapāda wrote or compiled[449] the Māṇḍūkya Kārikā, also known as the Gauḍapāda Kārikā or the Āgama Sāstra.[450] The Māṇḍūkya Kārikā is a commentary in verse form on the Māṇḍūkya Upanishad, one of the shortest Upanishads consisting of just 13 prose sentences. Of the ancient literature related to Advaita Vedānta, the oldest surviving complete text is the Māṇḍūkya Kārikā.[451] The Māṇḍūkya Upanishad was considered to be a Śruti before the era of Adi Shankara, but not treated as particularly important.[450] In later post-Shankara period its value became far more important, and regarded as expressing the essence of the Upanishad philosophy. The entire Karika became a key text for the Advaita school in this later era.[452][note 74]

Gaudapada took over the Yogachara teaching of vijñapti-mātra, "representation-only," which states that the empirical reality that we experience is a fabrication of the mind, experienced by consciousness-an-sich,[144][note 75] and the four-cornered negation, which negates any positive predicates of 'the Absolute'.[144][145][note 76] Gaudapada "wove [both doctrines] into the philosophy of Mandukaya Upanisad, which was further developed by Shankara".[455][note 77] In this view, the ultimate ontological reality is the pure consciousness, which is bereft of attributes and intentionality. The world of duality is nothing but a vibration of the mind (manodṛśya or manaspaṇḍita). The pluralistic world is imagined by the mind (saṁkalpa) and this false projection is sponsored by the illusory factor called māyā.[web 28]

Gauḍapāda uses the concepts of Ajātivāda to explain that 'the Absolute' is not subject to birth, change and death. The Absolute is aja, the unborn eternal.[457] The empirical world of appearances is considered unreal, and not absolutely existent.[457]

Early medieval period - Maṇḍana Miśra and Adi Shankara

Maṇḍana Miśra

Maṇḍana Miśra, an older contemporary of Shankara,[458] was a Mimamsa scholar and a follower of Kumarila, but also wrote a seminal text on Advaita that has survived into the modern era, the Brahma-siddhi.[459][460] According to Fiordalis, he was influenced by the Yoga-tradition, and with that indirectly by Buddhism, given the strong influence of Buddhism on the Yoga-tradition.[43] For a couple of centuries he seems to have been regarded as "the most important representative of the Advaita position,"[35][184][note 78] and the "theory of error" set forth in the Brahma-siddhi became the normative Advaita Vedānta theory of error.[461]

Adi Shankara

Very little is known about Shankara. According to Dalal, "Hagiographical accounts of his life, the Śaṅkaravijayas ("Conquests of Śaṅkara"), were composed several centuries after his death,"[web 6] in the 14th to 17th century, and established Shankara as a rallying symbol of values in a time when most of India was conquered by Muslims.[34] He is often considered to be the founder of the Advaita Vedānta school, but was actually a systematizer, not a founder.[web 6][462]

Systematizer of Advaita thought

Shankara was a scholar who synthesized and systematized Advaita-vāda thought which already existed at his lifetime.[462] According to Nakamura, comparison of the known teachings of the early Vedantins and Shankara's thought shows that most of the characteristics of Shankara's thought "were advocated by someone before Śaṅkara".[462] According to Nakamura, after the growing influence of Buddhism on Vedānta, culminating in the works of Gauḍapāda, Adi Shankara gave a Vedantic character to the Buddhist elements in these works,[463] synthesising and rejuvenating the doctrine of Advaita.[464] According to Koller, using ideas in ancient Indian texts, Shankara systematized the foundation for Advaita Vedānta in the 8th century, reforming Badarayana's Vedānta tradition.[465] According to Mayeda, Shankara represents a turning point in the development of Vedānta,[463] yet he also notices that it is only since Deussens's praise that Shankara "has usually been regarded as the greatest philosopher of India." [466] Mayeda further notes that Shankara was primarily concerned with moksha, "and not with the establishment of a complete system of philosophy or theology,"[466] following Potter, who qualifies Shankara as a "speculative philosopher." [467] Lipner notes that Shankara's "main literary approach was commentarial and hence perforce disjointed rather than procedurally systematic [...] though a systematic philosophy can be derived from Samkara's thought." [468]

Writings

Main article: Adi Shankara bibliography

Adi Shankara is best known for his reviews and commentaries (Bhasyas) on ancient Indian texts. His Brahmasutrabhasya (literally, commentary on Brahma Sutra) is a fundamental text of the Vedānta school of Hinduism.[339] His commentaries on ten Mukhya (principal) Upanishads are also considered authentic by scholars.[339][469] Other authentic works of Shankara include commentaries on the Bhagavad Gītā (part of his Prasthanā Trayaī Bhasya).[139] He also authored Upadesasahasri, his most important original philosophical work.[465][470] The authenticity of Shankara being the author of Vivekacūḍāmaṇi[471] has been questioned, and "modern scholars tend to reject its authenticity as a work by Shankara." [472]

Influence of Shankara

While Shankara has an unparalleled status in the history of Advaita Vedānta, scholars have questioned the traditional narrative of Shankara's early influence in India.[34][35]

[184] Until the 10th century Shankara was overshadowed by his older contemporary Maṇḍana Miśra, who was considered to be the major representative of Advaita.[35][184] Only when Vacaspati Misra, an influential student of Maṇḍana Miśra, harmonised the teachings of Shankara with those of Maṇḍana Miśra, Shankara's teachings gained prominence.[473] Some modern Advaitins argue that most of post-Shankara Advaita Vedanta actually deviates from Shankara, and that only his student Suresvara, who's had little influence, represents Shankara correctly.[474] In this view, Shankara's influential student Padmapada misunderstood Shankara, while his views were maintained by the Suresvara school.[474] According to Satchidanandendra Sarasvati, "almost all the later Advaitins were influenced by Mandana Misra and Bhaskara." [475] [note 9] Until the 11th century, Vedanta itself was a peripheral school of thought; [476] Vedanta became a major influence when Vedanta philosophy was utilized by various sects of Hinduism to ground their doctrines, [396] such as Ramanuja (11th c.), who aligned bhakti, "the major force in the religions of Hinduism," with philosophical thought, meanwhile rejecting Shankara's views.[web 29]

The cultural influence of Shankara and Advaita Vedanta started only centuries later, in the Vijayanagara Empire in the 14th century, [34][477][478] when Sringeri matha started to receive patronage from the kings of the Vijayanagara Empire and became a powerful institution. [479] Vidyaranya, also known as Madhava, who was the Jagadguru of the Śringeri Śāraḍa Pīṭham from ca. 1374–1380 to 1386 [479] played a central role in this growing influence of Advaita Vedanta, and the deification of Shankara as a ruler-renunciate. [34][477][480][481] From 1346 onwards Sringeri matha received patronage from the Vijayanagara kings, and its importance and influence grew rapidly in the second half of the 14th century. [479][note 79] Vidyaranya and the Sringeri matha competed for royal patronage and converts with Srivaisnava Visistadvaita, which was dominant in territories conquered by the Vijayanagara Empire, [483] and Madhava (the pre-ordination name of Vidyaranya) presented Shankara's teachings as the summit of all darsanas, portraying the other darsanas as partial truths which converged in Shankara's teachings. [346] The subsequent Shankara Digvijayam genre, following the example of the earlier Madhva Digvijayam, [484] presented Shankara as a ruler-renunciate, conquering the four quarters of India and bringing harmony. [480][481] The genre created legends to turn Shankara into a "divine folk-hero who spread his teaching through his digvijaya ("universal conquest") all over India like a victorious conqueror." [346][482]

Shankara's position was further established in the 19th and 20th century, when neo-Vedantins and western Orientalists, following Vidyaranya, elevated Advaita Vedanta "as the connecting theological thread that united Hinduism into a single religious tradition." [485] Shankara became "an iconic representation of Hindu religion and culture," despite the fact that most Hindus do not adhere to Advaita Vedanta. [486]

Advaita Vedanta sub-schools

Two defunct schools are the Pancapadika and Istasiddhi, which were replaced by Prakasatman's Vivarana school. [187] The still existing Bhāmatī and Vivarana developed in the 11th-14th century.[web 30][112] These schools worked out the logical implications of various Advaita doctrines. Two of the problems they encountered were the further interpretations of the concepts of māyā and avidya.[web 30]

Padmapada (c. 800 CE),[487] the founder of the defunct Pancapadika school, was a direct disciple of Shankara. He wrote the Pancapadika, a commentary on the Sankara-bhaya.[487] Padmapada diverged from Shankara in his description of avidya, designating prakṛti as avidya or ajnana.[488]

Sureśvara (fl. 800–900 CE)[489] was a contemporary of Shankara,[458] and often (incorrectly) identified with Maṇḍana Miśra.[458][note 80] Sureśvara has also been credited as the founder of a pre-Shankara branch of Advaita Vedānta.[489]

Mandana Mishra's student Vachaspati Miśra (9th/10th century CE),[490][491][492] who is believed to have been an incarnation of Shankara to popularize the Advaita view,[493] wrote the Bhamati, a commentary on Shankara's Brahma Sutra Bhashya, and the Brahmatattva-samiksa, a commentary on Mandana Mishra's Brahma-siddhi. His thought was mainly inspired by Mandana Miśra, and harmonises Shankara's thought with that of Mandana Miśra.[494][web 30] The Bhamati school takes an ontological approach. It sees the Jiva as the source of avidya.[web 30] It sees contemplation as the main factor in the acquirement of liberation, while the study of the Vedas and reflection are additional factors.[495][496]

Vimuktatman (c. 1200 CE)[497] wrote the Ista-siddhi.[497] It is one of the four traditional siddhi, together with Mandana's Brahma-siddhi, Suresvara's Naiskarmya-siddhi, and Madusudana's Advaita-siddhi.[498] According to Vimuktatman, absolute Reality is "pure intuitive consciousness".[499] His school of thought was eventually replaced by Prakasatman's Vivarana school.[187]

Prakasatman (c. 1200–1300)[187] wrote the Pancapadika-Vivarana, a commentary on the Pancapadika by Padmapadacharya.[187] The Vivarana lends its name to the subsequent school. According to Roodurmun, "[H]is line of thought [...] became the leitmotif of all subsequent developments in the evolution of the Advaita tradition." [187] The Vivarana school takes an epistemological approach. It is distinguished from the Bhamati school by its rejection of action and favouring Vedic study and "a direct apprehension of Brahma." [495] Prakasatman was the first to propound the theory of mulavidya or maya as being of "positive beginningless nature", [500] and sees Brahman as the source of avidya. Critics object that Brahman is pure consciousness, so it cannot be the source of avidya. Another problem is that contradictory qualities, namely knowledge and ignorance, are attributed to Brahman.[web 30]

Another late figure which is widely associated with Advaita and was influential on late Advaita thought was Śrīharṣa.

Late medieval India - yogic Advaita

Michael S. Allen and Anand Venkatkrishnan note that Shankara is very well-studied, but "scholars have yet to provide even a rudimentary, let alone comprehensive account of the history of Advaita Vedānta in the centuries leading up to the colonial period." [433]

While indologists like Paul Hacker and Wilhelm Halbfass took Shankara's system as the measure for an "orthodox" Advaita Vedānta, the living Advaita Vedānta tradition in medieval times was influenced by, and incorporated elements from, the yogic tradition and texts like the Yoga Vasistha and the Bhagavata Purana. [44] Yoga and samkhya had become minor schools of thought since the time of Shankara, and no longer posed a threat for the sectarian identity of Advaita, in contrast to the Vaishnava traditions. [478]

The Yoga Vasistha became an authoritative source text in the Advaita vedānta tradition in the 14th century, and the "yogic Advaita" [501] [502] of Vidyāraṇya's Jivanmuktiviveka (14th century) was influenced by the (Laghu-)Yoga-Vasistha, which in turn was influenced by Kashmir Shaivism. [503] Vivekananda's 19th century emphasis on nirvikalpa samadhi was preceded by medieval yogic influences on Advaita Vedānta. In the 16th and 17th centuries, some Nath and hatha yoga texts also came within the scope of the developing Advaita Vedānta tradition. [65]

According to Andrew Nicholson, it was with the arrival of Islamic rule, first in the form of Delhi Sultanate and later the Mughal Empire, and the subsequent persecution of Indian religions, that Hindu scholars began a self-conscious attempts to define an identity and unity. [504] [505] Between the twelfth and the fourteenth century, this effort emerged with the "astika and nastika" schema of classifying Indian philosophy. [504]

Vidyāraṇya

It is only during this period that the historical fame and cultural influence of Shankara and Advaita Vedanta was established. [34] [477] [478] Advaita Vedanta's position as most influential Hindu darsana took shape as Advaitins in the Vijayanagara Empire competed for patronage from the royal court, and tried to convert others to their sect. [483] Sringeri matha started to receive patronage from the kings of the Vijayanagara Empire [184] [34] [479] [477] who shifted their allegiance from Advaitic Agamic Shaivism to Brahmanical Advaita orthodoxy. [506]

Central in this repositioning was Vidyāraṇya, [34] [477] also known as Madhava, who was the Jagadguru of the Śringeri Śārada Pīṭham from 1380 to 1386 [507] and a minister in the Vijayanagara Empire. [508] He inspired the re-creation of the Hindu Vijayanagara Empire of South India, in response to the devastation caused by the Islamic Delhi Sultanate, [34] [477] [478] [508] but his efforts were also targeted at Srivaishnava groups, especially Visistadvaita, which was dominant in territories conquered by the Vijayanagara Empire. [509] Sects competed for patronage from the royal court, and tried to convert others to their own sectarian system, and Vidyaranya efforts were aimed at promoting Advaita Vedanta. [483] Most of Shankara's biographies were created and published from the 14th to the 17th century, such as the widely cited Śankara-vijaya, in which legends were created to turn Shankara into a "divine folk-hero who spread his teaching through his digvijaya ("universal conquest") all over India like a victorious conqueror."[346][482][510]

Vidyaranya and his brothers wrote extensive Advaitic commentaries on the Vedas and Dharma to make "the authoritative literature of the Aryan religion" more accessible.[346] In his doxography Sarvadarśanaśaṅgraha ("Summary of all views") Vidyaranya presented Shankara's teachings as the summit of all darsanas, presenting the other darsanas as partial truths which converged in Shankara's teachings, which was regarded to be the most inclusive system.[511][346] The Vaishanava traditions of Dvaita and Viśiṣṭadvaita were not classified as Vedānta, and placed just above Buddhism and Jainism, reflecting the threat they posed for Vidyaranya's Advaita allegiance.[47] Bhedābheda wasn't mentioned at all, "literally written out of the history of Indian philosophy." [512] Vidyaranya became head of Sringeri matha, proclaiming that it was established by Shankara himself.[346][482] Vidyaranya enjoyed royal support,[508] and his sponsorship and methodical efforts helped establish Shankara as a rallying symbol of values, spread historical and cultural influence of Shankara's Vedānta philosophies, and establish monasteries (mathas) to expand the cultural influence of Shankara and Advaita Vedānta.[34]

Modern Advaita

Nīścaldās and "Greater" Advaita

Michael S. Allen has written on the influence and popularity of Advaita Vedānta in early modern north India, especially on the work of the Advaita Dādū-panthī monk Nīścaldās (ca. 1791–1863), author of The Ocean of Inquiry (Hindi: Vichāra-sāgara), a vernacular compendium of Advaita.[25] According to Allen, the work of Nīścaldās "was quite popular in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries: it was translated into over eight languages and was once referred to by Vivekananda as having 'more influence in India than any [book] that has been written in any language within the last three centuries.'"[25]

Allen highlights the widespread prominence in early modern India of what he calls "Greater Advaita Vedānta" which refers to popular Advaita works, including "narratives and dramas, "eclectic" works blending Vedānta with other traditions, and vernacular works such as The Ocean of Inquiry." [25] Allen refers to several popular late figures and texts which draw on Advaita Vedānta, such as the Maharashtrian sant Eknāth (16th c.), the popular Adhyātma-rāmāyaṇa (ca. late 15th c.), which synthesizes Rama bhakti and advaita metaphysics and the Tripurā-rahasya (a tantric text that adopts an advaita metaphysics).[25] Other important vernacular Advaita figures include the Hindu authors Manohardās and Māṇakdās (who wrote the Ātma-bodh). Advaita literature was also written in Tamil, Telugu, Malayalam, Kannada, Marathi, Gujarati, Hindi, Punjabi, Bengali, and Oriya.[25]

Neo-Vedānta

Mahatma Gandhi stated "I am an advaitist".[513][514]

Main articles: Neo-Vedanta and Hindu nationalism

According to King, with the consolidation of the British imperialist rule the new rulers started to view Indians through the "colonially crafted lenses" of Orientalism. In response Hindu nationalism emerged, striving for socio-political independence and countering the influence of Christian missionaries.[515] Among the colonial era intelligentsia the monistic Advaita Vedānta has been a major ideological force for Hindu nationalism,[516] with Hindu intellectuals formulating a "humanistic, inclusivist" response, now called Neo-Vedānta, attempting to respond to this colonial stereotyping of "Indian culture [as] backward, superstitious and inferior to the West." [517]

Due to the influence of Vidyaranya's Sarvadarśanaśaṅgraha, early Indologists regarded Advaita Vedanta as the most accurate interpretation of the Upanishads.[47] Vedānta came to be regarded, both by westerners as by Indian nationalists, as the essence of Hinduism, and Advaita Vedānta came to be regarded as "then paradigmatic example of the mystical nature of the Hindu religion" and umbrella of "inclusivism".[518] Colonial era Indian thinkers, such as Vivekananda, presented Advaita Vedānta as an inclusive universal religion, a spirituality that in part helped organize a religiously infused identity. It also aided the rise of Hindu nationalism as a counter weight to Islam-infused Muslim communitarian organizations such as the Muslim League, to Christianity-infused colonial orientalism and to religious persecution of those belonging to Indian religions.[519][505] [520] Neo-Vedānta subsumed and incorporated Buddhist ideas thereby making the Buddha a part of the Vedānta tradition, all in an attempt to reposition the history of Indian culture.[431] This view on Advaita Vedānta, according to King, "provided an opportunity for the construction of a nationalist ideology that could unite Hindus in their struggle against colonial oppression".[521]

Vivekananda discerned a universal religion, regarding all the apparent differences between various traditions as various manifestations of one truth.[522] Vivekananda emphasised nirvikalpa samadhi as the spiritual goal of Vedānta, he equated it to the liberation in Yoga and encouraged Yoga practice which he called Raja yoga.[523][note 81] With the efforts of Vivekananda, modern formulations of Advaita Vedānta have "become a dominant force in Indian intellectual thought", though Hindu beliefs and practices are diverse.[432]

Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan, first a professor at Oxford University and later a President of India, further popularized Advaita Vedānta, presenting it as the essence of Hinduism. [web 31] According to Michael Hawley, Radhakrishnan saw other religions, as well as "what Radhakrishnan understands as lower forms of Hinduism," as interpretations of Advaita Vedānta, thereby "in a sense Hindusizing all religions".[web 31] Radhakrishnan metaphysics was grounded in Advaita Vedānta, but he reinterpreted Advaita Vedānta for contemporary needs and context.[web 31][note 82]

Mahatma Gandhi declared his allegiance to Advaita Vedānta, and was another popularizing force for its ideas.[526]

Contemporary Advaita Vedānta

Contemporary teachers are the orthodox Jagadguru of Sringeri Sharada Peetham; the more traditional teachers Sivananda Saraswati (1887–1963), Chinmayananda Saraswati (1916-1993),[web 32] Dayananda Saraswati (Arsha Vidya) (1930-2015), Swami Paramarthananda, Swami Tattvavidananda Saraswati, Carol Whitfield (Radha), Sri Vasudevacharya (previously Michael Comans)[web 32] and less traditional teachers such as Narayana Guru.[web 32] According to Sangeetha Menon, prominent names in 20th century Advaita tradition are Shri Chandrashekhara Bharati Mahaswami, Chandrasekharendra Saraswati Swamikal, Sacchidānandendra Saraswati.[web 33]

Influence on new religious movements

Advaita Vedānta has gained attention in western spirituality and New Age as nondualism, where various traditions are seen as driven by the same non-dual experience.[8] Nonduality points to "a primordial, natural awareness without subject or object".[web 34] It is also used to refer to interconnectedness, "the sense that all things are interconnected and not separate, while at the same time all things retain their individuality".[web 35]

Neo-Advaita is a new religious movement based on a popularised, western interpretation of Advaita Vedānta and the teachings of Ramana Maharshi.[527] Notable neo-advaita teachers are H. W. L. Poonja,[528][527] his students Gangaji[529] Andrew Cohen[note 83], and Eckhart Tolle.[527]

Highest self:

Shankara, Upadesasahasri I.18.3: "I am ever-free, the existent" (Sat). I.18.6: "The two [contradictory] notions "I am the Existent-Brahman" and "I act," have Atman as their witness. It is considered more reasonable to give up only [that one] of the two [notions] which arises from ignorance. I.18.7: "The notion, "I am the Existent," arises from right means of knowledge [while] the other notion has its origin in fallacious means of knowledge." (Mayeda 1992, p. 172)

Brahmajnanavalimala Verse 20: "Brahman is real, the universe is mithya (it cannot be categorized as either real or unreal). The jiva is Brahman itself and not different."

Translation by S. N. Sastri [1]

Sivananda 1993, p. 219: "Brahman (the Absolute) is alone real; this world is unreal; and the Jiva or individual soul is non-different from Brahman."

Menon 2012: "The experiencing self (jīva) and the transcendental self of the Universe (ātman) are in reality identical (both are Brahman), though the individual self seems different as space within a container seems different from space as such. These cardinal doctrines are represented in the anonymous verse "brahma satyam jagan mithya; jīvo brahmaiva na aparāh" (Brahman is alone True, and this world of plurality is an error; the individual self is not different from Brahman)."

Deutsch 1973, p. 54: "[the] essential status [of the individual human person] is that of unqualified reality, of identity with the Absolute [...] the self (jīva) is only misperceived: the self is really Brahman."

Koller 2013, pp. 100–101: "Atman, which is identical to Brahman, is ultimately the only reality and [...] the appearance of plurality is entirely the work of ignorance [...] the self is ultimately of the nature of Atman/Brahman [...] Brahman alone is ultimately real."

Bowker 2000a, "Advaita Vedānta": "There is only Brahman, which is necessarily undifferentiated. It follows that there cannot even be a difference, or duality, between the human subject, or self, and Brahman, for Brahman must be that very self (since Brahman is the reality underlying all appearance). The goal of human life and wisdom must, therefore, be the realization that the self (ātman) is Brahman."

Hacker (1995, p. 88) notes that Shankara uses two groups of words to denote 'atman': "One group - principally jīva, vijñānatman, and sarīra - expresses the illusory aspect of the soul [...] But in addition there are the two expressions atman and pratyagatman.

These also designate the individual soul, but in its real aspect." Mayeda (1992, pp. 11, 14) uses the word pratyagatman; Sivananda 1993, p. 219), Deutsch (1973, p. 54), and Menon (2012) use the term jīva when referring to the identity of atman and Brahman.

Form of monism:

Malkovsky 2000, p. 71: "The interpretation of advaita that is the most common equates non-duality with monism and acosmic illusionism. Only the Absolute, or the parā brahma, is said to exist; everything else is but an illusory appearance."

Menon 2012: "The essential philosophy of Advaita is an idealist monism, and is considered to be presented first in the Upaniṣads and consolidated in the Brahma Sūtra by this tradition."

King 1995, p. 65: "The prevailing monism of the Upanishads was developed by the Advaita Vedānta to its ultimate extreme."

Mohanty 1980, p. 205: "Nyaya-Vaiśeṣika is realistic; Advaita Vedānta is idealistic. The former is pluralistic, the latter monistic."

Philosophy and spiritual experience:

Deutsch 1988, p. 4: "Advaita Vedānta is more than a philosophical system, as we understand these terms in the West today; it is also a practical guide to spiritual experience and is intimately bound up with spiritual experience."

Puligandla 1997, p. 11: "Any philosophy worthy of its title should not be a mere intellectual exercise but should have practical application in enabling man to live an enlightened life. A philosophy which makes no difference to the quality and style of our life is no philosophy, but an empty intellectual construction."

According to Shankara, in Adhyāsa-bhāṣya (pre-amble to Brahma Sūtra Bhāṣya I.1.1), it is self-evident that Ātman, pure awareness or the witness-consciousness, is completely different from non-Ātman, the thinking and acting self and the material world.

Self-luminosity; see Deutsch 1973, p. 48; Dasgupta 1975, pp. 148–149; Indich 2000, pp. 24, 28; Menon 2012; Ganeri 2019, p. 103; Murti 1983, p. 339; Isaeva 1993, p. 102.

For the translation and meaning of svayam prakāśa:

svayam: "himself, autonomous, in person" (Sanskrit Dictionary for Spoken Sanskrit, svayam Archived 7 December 2021 at the Wayback Machine)

prakāśa: "manifestation," literally "light" or "illumination"; "the capacity to disclose, present, or make manifest" (Fasching 2021 note 1, referring to "MacKenzie 2017, 335; cf. also Ram-Prasad 2007, 53")

Svayam prakāśa can be translated as:

"self-luminous" (Ganeri 2019; Menon 2012)

"self-revealing" (Dasgupta 1975))

"self-manifesting" (Chatterjea 2003, p. 1)

"Self-aware" (Wood 1992, p. 102)

"Immediate" (Murti 1983, p. 339)

On the meaning of svayam prakāśa:

Menezes 2017, p. 198: "Self-luminosity (svayam prakāśa) means self is pure awareness by nature"; idem Ganeri 2019: "self is pure awareness by nature."

Murti 1983, p. 339: "a foundational consciousness [...] to which everything is presented, but is itself no presentation, that which knows all, but is itself no object."

For a detailed treatment, see Mackenzie 2012; Fasching 2011.

For pure Consciousness, also included in the phrase sat-cit-ananda, see Mayeda 1992, p. 103 (verse 1), p.105 (note 1); p.126, verse 7; Deutsch 1973, pp. 48–51; Davis 2010, pp. 34–35; Rambachan 2006, pp. 7, 99–103; Menon 2012; Fasching 2021; Sinha 2016, p. 42.

Shankara, Upadeśasāhasrī I.1.1, translated in Mayeda 1992, p. 103: "Salutation to the all-knowing Pure Consciousness [note 1] which pervades all, is all, abides in the hearts of all beings, and is beyond all objects [of knowledge]. [Note 1 by Mayeda: "The Sanskrit term caitanya translated here as "Pure Consciousness" is used as a synonym for Brahman-Atman, indicating the nature of It."]

Shankara, Upadeśasāhasrī I.11.7, translated in Mayeda 1992, p. 126: "Being different from name, form, and action and by nature constantly free, I am Atman, ie. the highest Brahman; I am Pure Consciousness only and always non-dual."

Deutsch 1973, p. 48: "Atman (or paramatman, the highest Self), for Advaita vedanta, is that pure, undifferentiated, self-shining consciousness, timeless, spaceless, and unthinkable, that is non-different from Brahman and that underlies and supports the individual human person."

Menon 2012: "For classical Advaita Vedānta, Brahman is the fundamental reality underlying all objects and experiences. Brahman is explained as pure existence, pure consciousness and pure bliss. All forms of existence presuppose a knowing self. Brahman or pure consciousness underlies the knowing self. Consciousness according to the Advaita School, unlike the positions held by other Vedānta schools, is not a property of Brahman but its very nature. Brahman is also one without a second, all-pervading and the immediate awareness."

Fasching 2021: "According to Advaita Vedānta, the absolute is pure, qualityless and unchanging consciousness. Our consciousness (the consciousness of individual conscious entities) is not distinct from it, but is nothing other than this absolute itself, (seemingly) modified by the mental states of respective individual minds."

Sinha 2016, p. 42: "According to the Advaita Vedānta, the Atman is pure, eternal, undifferented consciousness, while the jīva is the pure consciousness limited or determined by the internal organ (antahkarana)."

Potter (2008, p. 136); see Brihadaranyaka Upanishad 2.51-14; Chandogya Upanishad 8.3.4.

Literally: end or the goal of the Vedas, referring to the Upanishads and their interpretation; it is a tradition of interpretation of the Upanishads, (Nakamura 1990, p. 112) the Brahma Sutras, and the Bhagavad Gītā. (Grimes 1990, pp. 6–7, Menon 2012)

King 2002, p. 128: "Although it is common to find Western scholars and Hindus arguing that Sankaracarya was the most influential and important figure in the history of Hindu intellectual thought, this does not seem to be justified by the historical evidence."

Critical scholarship has identified a number of key concepts used in contemporary Advaita Vedānta which differ from Shankara's views, revealing a discrepancy between the nominal adherence to Shankara and the actual alliance with his views. (Suthren Hirst 2005, p. 4, Potter 2006, pp. 6–7)

Some modern Advaitins, specifically Satchidanandendra Sarasvati, argue that most of post-Shankara Advaita Vedanta actually deviates from Shankara, an argument deemed correct by Potter. (Potter 2006, pp. 6–7, Roodurmun 2002, pp. 33–34)

Potter (2006, pp. 6–7): "...these modern interpreters are implying that most Advaitins after Samkara's time are confused and basically mistaken, and that 99% of the extant classical interpretive literature on Samkara's philosophy is off the mark. This is clearly a remarkably radical conclusion. Yet, there is good reason to think that it may well be true."

Satchidanandendra Sarasvati 1997, p. 6: "almost all the later Advaitins were influenced by Mandana Misra and Bhaskara."

Sringeri matha received patronage from the kings of the Vijayanagara Empire, (Goodding 2013, p. 89) competing with Srivaisnava Visistadvaita groups for royal patronage and converts. (Stoker 2016, pp. 55–56) The works of the influential Advaitin Vidyaranya (Madhava, 14th cent.), jagadguru of Sringeri matha from ca. 1374–1380 to 1386, presented Advaita teachings as the summit of the Indian darśanam, (Hacker 1995, pp. 29–30, Blake Michael 1992, pp. 60–62 with notes 6, 7, and 8, King 2002, p. 128, Roodurmun 2002, pp. 33–34) while the subsequent Shankara Digvijayam genre deified him as a ruler-renunciate who conquered the four quarters. (Nowicka 2016, p. 147, Bader 2001, p. vii) Shankara's prominence was further established in the 19th and 20th century, gaining worldwide fame, in a "confluence of interests" of Western Christian missionaries, the British Raj, and Indian nationalists. (King 2002, pp. 129–135)

According to Anantanand Rambachan, advaita describes the relation between Brahman, the origin of everything, and the world and the individual self. This relation is neither one nor two. It is not "one," because "[t]he world, as an effect, originates from Brahman and is dependent on Brahman for its existence." But it is also not "two," because Brahman is "the ultimate ontological ground of the world and the self." [60]

A reference to Non-duality is also made in the Chandogya Upanishad, within a dialogue between the Vedic sage Uddalaka Aruni and his son Svetaketu, as follows :

सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीत् एकमेवा अद्वितीयम्
तद्वैक आहुरसदेवेदमग्र आसीदेकमेवाद्वितीयं तस्मादसतः सज्जायत

—Chandogya Upanishad 6.2.1[web 3]

Translation:

Somya, before this world was manifest, there was only existence, one without duality
On this subject, some maintain that before this world was manifest, there was only non-existence, one without a second.
Out of that non-existence, existence emerged.

—Chandogya Upanishad

Many of these traditions, which were influential among Neo-Vedantins, did not derive from Vedantic lineages, i.e., the "Advaita Vedanta" of Shankara. As Madaio (2017, p. 4) points out "...it is possible to speak of sanskritic and vernacular advaitic texts (which are either explicitly non-dualistic or permit a non-dualistic reading) and 'Advaita Vedanta' texts which originate within sampradayas that claim an Advaita Vedantic lineage. This, then, avoids the obfuscating tendency to subsume advaitic but non-vedantic works under a 'Vedanta' or 'Advaita Vedanta' umbrella."

King 1995, p. 65: "The prevailing monism of the Upanishads was developed by the Advaita Vedanta to its ultimate extreme."

The suffering created by the workings of the mind entangled with physical reality Jivanmukti is a state that transforms the nature, attributes and behaviors of an individual. After this transformation, the liberated individual shows attributes such as: (Aiyar 1914, pp. 140–147); (Nikhilananda 1958, pp. 53–79); (Fort 1998) he is not bothered by disrespect and endures cruel words, treats others with respect regardless of how others treat him; when confronted by an angry person he does not return anger, instead replies with soft and kind words;

even if tortured, he speaks and trusts the truth;

he does not crave for blessings or expect praise from others;
he never injures or harms any life or being (ahimsa), he is intent in the welfare of all beings;
he is as comfortable being alone as in the presence of others;
he is as comfortable with a bowl, at the foot of a tree in tattered robe without help, as when he is in a mithuna (union of mendicants), grama (village) and nagara (city); he does not care about or wear sikha (tuft of hair on the back of head for religious reasons), nor the holy thread across his body. To him, knowledge is sikha, knowledge is the holy thread, knowledge alone is supreme. Outer appearances and rituals do not matter to him, only knowledge matters; for him there is no invocation nor dismissal of deities, no mantra nor non-mantra, no prostrations nor worship of gods, goddess or ancestors, nothing other than knowledge of Self;
he is humble, high spirited, of clear and steady mind, straightforward, compassionate, patient, indifferent, courageous, speaks firmly and with sweet words.

The true Self is itself just that pure consciousness, without which nothing can be known in any way.(...) And that same true Self, pure consciousness, is not different from the ultimate world Principle, Brahman (...) Brahman (=the true Self, pure consciousness) is the only Reality (sat), since It is untinged by difference, the mark of ignorance, and since It is the one thing that is not sublimatable.[77]

Fowler 2002, pp. 30–31, 260–264: "As a philosophical and metaphysical term it [monism] refers to the acceptance of one single, ultimate, principle as the basis of the cosmos, the unity and oneness of all reality (...) [monism] has a model par excellence in that put forward by the eighth-century Indian philosopher Shankara, who is associated with the school of thought of Advaita Vedanta. (p. 263) – "In Shankara's words: 'the notions oneself and one's own are indeed falsely constructed (upon Atman) through nescience. When there is (the knowledge of) the oneness of Atman, these notions certainly do not exist. If the seed does not exist, whence shall the fruit arise?'"

These characteristics and steps are described in various Advaita texts, such as by Shankara in Chapter 1.1 of Brahmasutrabhasya,[84] and in the Bhagavad Gita Chapter 10

Example self-restraints mentioned in Hindu texts: one must refrain from any violence that causes injury to others, refrain from starting or propagating deceit and falsehood, refrain from theft of others' property, refrain from sexually cheating on one's partner, and refrain from avarice.[101][102][103]

Mayeda refers to statements from Shankara regarding epistemology (pramana-janya) in section 1.18.133 of Upadesasahasri, and section 1.1.4 of Brahmasutra-bhasya.[118] [119] NB: some manuscripts list Upadesasahasri verse 1.18.133 as 2.18.133, while Mayeda lists it as 1.18.133, because of interchanged chapter numbering.[120][121]

Sharma 2000, p. 177 refers to Brahma Sutra Bhashya 4.1.15, "which tradition views as an allusion to his own direct experience of the ultimate truth." It runs as follows: [...] How can one contest the heart-felt cognition of another as possessing brahman-knowledge, even though bearing a body?

1. Something is. 2. It is not. 3. It both is and is not. 4. It neither is nor is not.[146]

"Consciousness",[162][web 8] "intelligence",[163][161] "wisdom"

"the Absolute",[162][web 8] "infinite",[web 8] "the Highest truth"[web 8]

While the Vedanta tradition equates sat ("the Existent") with Brahman, the Chandogya Upanishad itself does not refer to Brahman.[19][155] Deutsch & Dalvi (2004, p. 8):

"Although the text does not use the term brahman, the Vedanta tradition is that the Existent (sat) referred to is no other than Brahman."

Shankara, himself, had renounced all religious ritual acts;[191]

For an example of Shankara's reasoning "why rites and ritual actions should be given up",[192] Elsewhere, Shankara's Bhasya on various Upanishads repeat "give up rituals and rites".[193]

Compare Mookerji 2011 on Svādhyāya (Vedic learning). Mookerji (2011, pp. 29–31) notes that the Rigveda, and Sayana's commentary, contain passages criticizing as fruitless mere recitation of the Ṛik (words) without understanding their inner meaning or essence, the knowledge of dharma and Parabrahman. Mookerji (2011, pp. 29, 34) concludes that in the Rigvedic education of the mantras "the contemplation and comprehension of their meaning was considered as more important and vital to education than their mere mechanical repetition and correct pronunciation." Mookerji (2011, p. 35) refers to Sayana as stating that "the mastery of texts, akshara-prapti, is followed by artha-bodha, perception of their meaning." (Artha may also mean "goal, purpose or essence," depending on the context.[194][web 10]) According to Mookerji (2011, p. 36), "the realization of Truth" and the knowledge of paramatman as revealed to the rishis is the real aim of Vedic learning, and not the mere recitation of texts.

Up.I.18.219: "The renunciation of all actions becomes the means for discriminating the meaning of the word "Thou" since there is an [Upanisadic] teaching, "Having become calm, self-controlled [...], one sees Atman there in oneself]" (Bhr. Up. IV, 4, 23)."[202]

It is not a philosophy in the western meaning of the word, according to Milne.[215]

Reason clarifies the truth and removes objections, according to the Advaita school, however it believes that pure logic cannot lead to philosophical truths and only experience and meditative insights do. The Sruti, it believes is a collection of experience and meditative insights about liberating knowledge,[227]

Sharma 1993, pp. 72–83: "According to Advaita, the pure subject is our true self whose knowledge is liberative, (...) If the subject could be realised in its purity then all misery would cease: this is called self-knowledge"

Timalsina 2008, p. xvii: "Advaita can be approached from various angles. Not only are there multiple interpretations of Advaita, there are different starting points from which one can arrive at the conclusion of non-duality".

Atman, Oxford Dictionaries, Oxford University Press (2012), Quote: "1. real self of the individual; 2. a person's soul"

Payne 2005, pp. 199–200 with p. 215 notes 5, 6: "A fourth metaphor is the monistic equation of the true or absolute self (atman) with absolute being (Brahman). In general, then, the conception of the self that emerges is one in which the self is in some way permanent, eternal, absolute or unchanging. It is also simultaneously universal and individual. The view is that there is an essence and that it can be known."

Soul:

Atman, Oxford Dictionaries, Oxford University Press (2012), Quote: "1. real self of the individual; 2. a person's soul"

David Lorenzen (2004), The Hindu World (Editors: Sushil Mittal and Gene Thursby), Routledge, ISBN 0-415215277, pp. 208–209, Quote: "Advaita and nirguni movements, on the other hand, stress an interior mysticism in which the devotee seeks to discover the identity of individual soul (atman) with the universal ground of being (brahman) or to find god within himself";

Richard King (1995), Early Advaita Vedanta and Buddhism, State University of New York Press, ISBN 978-0791425138, p. 64, Quote: "Atman as the innermost essence or soul of man, and Brahman as the innermost essence and support of the universe. (...) Thus we can see in the Upanishads, a tendency towards a convergence of microcosm and macrocosm, culminating in the equating of atman with Brahman".

Chad Meister (2010), The Oxford Handbook of Religious Diversity, Oxford University Press, ISBN 978-0195340136, p. 63; Quote: "Even though Buddhism explicitly rejected the Hindu ideas of Atman (soul) and Brahman, Hinduism treats Sakyamuni Buddha as one of the ten avatars of Vishnu."

Olivelle (1998, p. 77);

Compare Fasching 2021: For Advaita Vedānta, consciousness is to be distinguished from all contents of consciousness that might be introspectively detectable: It is precisely consciousness of whatever contents it is conscious of and not itself one of these contents. Its only nature is, Advaita holds, prakāśa (manifestation); in itself it is devoid of any content or structure and can never become an object.

Brahman is also defined as:

The unchanging, infinite, immanent, and transcendent reality which is all matter, energy, time, space, being, and everything beyond in this Universe; that is the one supreme, universal spirit without a second.(Brodd (2003); Vachatimanont (2005, pp. 47–48))

Bowker 2003, "Brahman": "(Skt., literally, 'growth' or 'expansion'). The one supreme, all pervading Spirit that is the origin and support of the phenomenal universe."

Puligandla 1997, p. 222 The supreme self. Puligandla states it as "the unchanging reality amidst and beyond the world."

The Self-existent, the Absolute and the Imperishable. Brahman is indescribable.Fowler 2005, p. 30: "Upanisadic thought is anything but consistent; nevertheless, there is a common focus on the acceptance of a totally transcendent Absolute, a trend which arose in the Vedic period. This indescribable Absolute is called Brahman [...]."

It provides the "stuff" from which everything is made

It sets everything into working, into existence

Gambhirananda: "That (is Brahman) from which (are derived) the birth etc. of this (universe)."[283]

Svarupalakshana, qualities, definition based on essence

The Advaitin scholar Madhusudana Sarasvati explained Brahman as the Reality that is simultaneously an absence of falsity (sat), absence of ignorance (cit), and absence of sorrow/self-limitation (ananda).[286]

Compare Parable of the Poisoned Arrow

These concepts are discussed in ancient and medieval texts of Hinduism, and other Indian religions, using synonymous terms. Cause is referred to as kārāṇa (कारण), nidana (निदान), hetu (हेतु) or mulam (मूलम्), while effect is referred to as kārya (कार्य), phala (फल), parinam (परिणाम) or Shungam (शुङ्ग).[web 17][309]

Advaita furthermore states that effect (kārya) is non-different from cause (kārāṇa), but the cause is different from the effect. This principle is called kārya-kārāṇa ananyatva. When the cause is destroyed, the effect will no longer exist. For example, cotton cloth is the effect of the cotton threads, which is the material cause. Without threads there will be no cotton cloth. Without cotton there will be no thread. According to Swami Sivananda, in his comments on the Brahmasūtra-Bhāṣya 2.1.9, Adi Shankara describes this as follows:

ananyatve'pi kāryakārāṇayoḥ kāryasya kārāṇātmatvaṃ na tu kārāṇasya kāryātmatvaṃ
Despite the non-difference of cause and effect, the effect has its self in the cause but not the cause in the effect.

The effect is of the nature of the cause and not the cause the nature of the effect.

Therefore the qualities of the effect cannot touch the cause.[web 19]

According to Eliot Deutsch, Advaita Vedānta states that from "the standpoint of Brahman-experience and Brahman itself, there is no creation" in the absolute sense, all empirically observed creation is relative and mere transformation of one state into another, all states are provisional and a cause-effect driven modification.[311]

According to Hugh Nicholson, "the definitive study on the development of the concept of vivarta in Indian philosophy, and in Advaita Vedanta in particular, remains Hacker's Vivarta.[313] According to Hacker, "the word maya has for [Shankara] hardly any terminological weight." [314]

Compare the misunderstanding of Yogacharas concept of vijñapti-mātra, 'representation-only', as 'consciousness-only'.

Śaṅkarācārya 1949, p. 32;

Sanskrit: तच् चैतत् परमार्थदर्शनं प्रतिपत्तुमिच्छता वर्णाश्रमाद्यभिमान-कृतपाञ्चत्तरूपपुत्रवित्तलोकैषणादिभ्यो व्युत्थानं कर्तव्यम् । सम्यक्प्रत्ययविरोधात् तदभिमानस्य भेददर्शनप्रतिषेधार्थोपपत्तिश्चोपपद्यते । न ह्येकस्मिन्नात्मन्यसंसारित्वबुद्धौ शास्त्रन्यायोत्पादितायां तद्विपरीता बुद्धिर्भवति । न ह्यग्नी शितत्वबुद्धिः, शरीरे वाजरामरणबुद्धिः । तस्मादविद्याकार्यत्वात् सर्वकर्मणां तत्साधनानां च यज्ञोपवीतादीनां परमार्थदर्शनिष्टेन त्यागः कर्तव्यः ॥ ४४ ॥

Many in number, the Upanishads developed in different schools at various times and places, some in the Vedic period and others in the medieval or modern era (the names of up to 112 Upanishads have been recorded).[327] All major commentators have considered the twelve to thirteen oldest of these texts as the principal Upanishads and as the foundation of Vedanta.

The Śruti includes the four Vedas including its four layers of embedded texts – the Samhitas, the Brahmanas, the Aranyakas, and the early Upanishads.[328]

Sanskrit: श्री संस्थान गौडपादाचार्य मठ, Śrī Sansthāna Gauḍapadācārya Maṭha

Nakamura also recognized the influence of these mathas, which he argues contributed to the influence of Shankara, which was "due to institutional factors". The mathas which he established remain active today, and preserve the teachings and influence of Shankara, "while the writings of other scholars before him came to be forgotten with the passage of time".[347]

According to Pandey, these Mathas were not established by Shankara himself, but were originally ashrams established by Vibhāṇḍaka and his son Ṛṣyaśṛṅga.[348] Shankara inherited the ashrams at Dvārakā and Śringeri, and shifted the ashram at Śṛṅgaverapura to Badarikāśrama, and the ashram at Angadeśa to Jagannātha Purī.[349]

Sanskrit.org: "Advaitins are non-sectarian, and they advocate worship of Siva and Visnu equally with that of the other deities of Hinduism, like Sakti, Ganapati and others."[web 22]

Archeological evidence suggest that the Smarta tradition in India dates back to at least 3rd-century CE.[351][352]

Practically, Shankara fostered a rapprochement between Advaita and smarta orthodoxy, which by his time had not only continued to defend the varnasramadharma theory as defining the path of karman, but had developed the practice of pancayatanapuja ("five-shrine worship") as a solution to varied and conflicting devotional practices. Thus one could worship any one of five deities (Vishnu, Siva, Durga, Surya, Ganesa) as one's istadevata ("deity of choice").[358]

Helmuth von Glasenapp (1995), Vedānta & Buddhism: A comparative study, Buddhist Publication Society, pages 2-3, Quote: "Vedānta and Buddhism have lived side by side for such a long time that obviously they must have influenced each other. The strong predilection of the Indian mind for a doctrine of universal unity has led the representatives of Mahāyāna to conceive Saṃsāra and Nirvāṇa as two aspects of the same and single true reality; for Nāgārjuna the empirical world is a mere appearance, as all dharmas, manifest in it, are perishable and conditioned by other dharmas, without having any independent existence of their own. Only the indefinable "Voidness" (Śūnyatā) to be grasped in meditation, and realized in Nirvāṇa, has true reality [in Buddhism]".

This development did not end with Advaita Vedānta but continued in Tantrism and various schools of Shaivism. Non-dual Kashmir Shaivism, for example, was influenced by, and took over doctrines from, several orthodox and heterodox Indian religious and philosophical traditions.[367] These include the orthodox Hindu schools of Vedānta, Sāṃkhya, Patañjali's Yoga tradition, and Nyāya, and prominent Buddhist schools, including Yogācāra and Mādhyamaka,[367] but also Tantra and the Nath-tradition.[368]

Kalupahana describes how in Buddhism there is also a current which favours substance ontology. Kalupahanan sees Mādhyamaka and Yogācāra as reactions against developments toward substance ontology in Buddhism.[390]

Scholars are divided on the historical influence of Advaita Vedānta. Some Indologists state that it is one of the most studied Hindu philosophy and the most influential schools of classical Indian thought:

Indich 2000, pp. 57–60

Brannigan 2009, p. 19: "Advaita Vedanta is the most influential philosophical system in Hindu thought."

Deutsch 1969, p. 3: "[Advaita Vedānta] has been and continues to be the most widely accepted system of thought among philosophers in India, and it is, we believe, one of the greatest philosophical achievements to be found in the East or the West."

In the Orientalist view, the medieval Muslim period was a time of stagnation and cultural degeneration, in which the original purity of the Upanisadic teachings, systematized by philosophers like Shankara, was lost. In this view, "the genuine achievements of Indian civilization" were recovered during the British colonial rule of India, due to the efforts of western Indologists, who viewed Advaita Vedanta as the authentic philosophy of the Upanishads, and Shankara as its greatest exponent.[429][note 70] While this view has been criticised by postcolonial studies and critiques of Orientalism, "in some corners of the academy, the Orientalists' understanding of premodern Indian history has so far escaped thorough reexamination."[430]

Nevertheless, Balasubramanian argues that since the basic ideas of the Vedanta systems are derived from the Vedas, the Vedantic philosophy is as old as the Vedas. [436]

Deutsch and Dalvi point out that, in the Indian context, texts "are only part of a tradition which is preserved in its purest form in the oral transmission as it has been going on." [438]

Nakamura notes that there are contradictions in doctrine between the four chapters. [449]

It is often used interchangeably with the term citta-mātra, but they have different meanings. The standard translation of both terms is "consciousness-only" or "mind-only." Several modern researchers object this translation, and the accompanying label of "absolute idealism" or "idealistic monism".[453] A better translation for vijñapti-mātra is representation-only.[454]

1. Something is. 2. It is not. 3. It both is and is not. 4. It neither is nor is not.[146][page needed] The 'four-cornered negation' is an English gloss of the Sanskrit, Chatushkoti. [citation needed]

The influence of Mahayana Buddhism on other religions and philosophies was not limited to Vedanta. Kalupahana notes that the Visuddhimagga – a Theravada Buddhist tradition, contains "some metaphysical speculations, such as those of the Sarvastivādins, the Sautrantikas, and even the Yogacarins".[456]

King 2002, p. 128: "Although it is common to find Western scholars and Hindus arguing that Sankaracarya was the most influential and important figure in the history of Hindu intellectual thought, this does not seem to be justified by the historical evidence." [35]

The insignificance of Sringeri matha before this time was such, that Hacker and Kulke & Rothermund have argued that Sringeri matha may have been founded by Vidyaranya himself, proclaiming that it was established by Shankara himself.[346][482]

Potter 2008, pp. 346–347, 420–423: "There is little firm historical information about Suresvara; tradition holds Suresvara is same as Mandanamisra."

According to Comans, this approach is missing in historic Advaita texts.[524]

Neo-Vedanta seems to be closer to Bhedabheda-Vedanta than to Shankara's Advaita Vedanta, with the acknowledgement of the reality of the world. Nicholas F. Gier:

"Ramakrsna, Svami Vivekananda, and Aurobindo (I also include M.K. Gandhi) have been labeled "neo-Vedantists," a philosophy that rejects the Advaitins' claim that the world is illusory. Aurobindo, in his The Life Divine, declares that he has moved from Sankara's "universal illusionism" to his own "universal realism" (2005: 432), defined as metaphysical realism in the European philosophical sense of the term." [525]

Presently Cohen has distanced himself from Poonja, and calls his teachings "Evolutionary Enlightenment".[530] What Is Enlightenment, the magazine published by Choen's organisation, has been critical of neo-Advaita several times, as early as 2001. See.[web 36][web 37][web 38]

Retrieved 24 June 2023. The Buddha's "middle path" strategy can be seen as one of first arguing that there is nothing that the word "I" genuinely denotes, and then explaining that our erroneous sense of an "I" stems from our employment of the useful fiction represented by the concept of the person. While the second part of this strategy only receives its full articulation in the later development of the theory of two truths, the first part can be found in the Buddha's own teachings, in the form of several philosophical arguments for non-self. Best known among these is the argument from impermanence (S III.66–8) [...].
 It is the fact that this argument does not contain a premise explicitly asserting that the five skandhas (classes of psychophysical element) are exhaustive of the constituents of persons, plus the fact that these are all said to be empirically observable, that leads some to claim that the Buddha did not intend to deny the existence of a self tout court. There is, however, evidence that the Buddha was generally hostile toward attempts to establish the existence of unobservable entities. In the Poṭṭhapāda Sutta (D I.178–203), for instance, the Buddha compares someone who posits an unseen seer in order to explain our introspective awareness of cognitions, to a man who has conceived a longing for the most beautiful woman in the world based solely on the thought that such a woman must surely exist. And in the Tevijja Sutta (D I.235–52), the Buddha rejects the claim of certain Brahmins to know the path to oneness with Brahman, on the grounds that no one has actually observed this Brahman. This makes more plausible the assumption that the argument has as an implicit premise the claim that there is no more to the person than the five skandhas.

Vajrayana: The Esoteric or Diamond Vehicle of Buddhism

Vajrayana, the "Diamond Vehicle," is a mystical branch of Mahayana Buddhism using powerful techniques like mantras, mudras (symbolic gestures), and mandalas (cosmic diagrams) for a faster path to enlightenment, emphasizing guru guidance and deity visualization to realize inherent Buddha-nature. Originating in India, it's prominent in Tibetan Buddhism, utilizing rituals and practices to transform all experiences into the path to awakening, focusing on realizing the union of wisdom (prajna) and skillful means (upaya).

Core Concepts & Practices

Mantra: Sacred syllables or phrases for mental protection and invoking divine energy.

Mandala: Symbolic cosmic maps for visualization, representing Buddha realms.

Mudra: Ritual hand gestures symbolizing enlightened qualities.

Deity Yoga: Visualizing oneself as a deity to embody enlightened qualities.

Guru Yoga: Connecting with a spiritual teacher (guru) to realize one's own Buddha-nature.

Yab-Yum: A symbol of sexual embrace representing the union of wisdom and method.

Key Features

Faster Path: Aims to achieve enlightenment more quickly than traditional methods.

Uses All Experience: Incorporates all aspects of life, including emotions and the world, as part of the path.

Esoteric & Ritualistic: Involves secret teachings, initiations (empowerments), and complex rituals.

Teacher-Dependent: Requires initiation and guidance from a qualified lama or guru.

Relationship to Buddhism

Mahayana Foundation: Builds upon Mahayana philosophy, using its concepts of emptiness (sunyata) and compassion.

Three Vehicles (Yanas): Often seen as the third, most advanced vehicle after Shravakayana and Mahayana.

Tibetan Buddhism: The primary vehicle for Tibetan traditions (Nyingma, Kagyu, Sakya, Gelug).

Modern Context

Spread globally after Tibetan refugees fled to India in 1959, bringing teachings to the West.

The Dalai Lama is a prominent leader, offering insights to a worldwide following.

Popular comment · Most practicing Tibetan Buddhist monasteries aren't in Tibet anymore. Anyway, what do "like" and "dislike" have to do with your practice? Do you practice to satisfy your ego? Your practice would be more sophisticated and profound if you found a community you would actually engage in practice with, regardless of tradition or your likes and dislikes. Edit: of course some temples aren't good fits, but that is very different from like and dislike.

Vajrayoginī (Sanskrit: Vajrayoginī; Tibetan: དོར་ཇེ་ནལ་འབྱུང་མ་, Dorjé Naljorma) is a Tantric Buddhist female Buddha and a Dākinī. Vajrayoginī's essence is "great passion" (maharaga), a transcendent passion that is free of selfishness and illusion — she intensely works for the well-being of others and for the destruction of ego clinging. She is seen as being ideally suited for people with strong passions, providing the way to transform those passions into enlightened virtues. She is an Anuttarayoga Tantra iṣṭadevatā (meditation deity) and her practice includes methods for preventing ordinary death, intermediate state (bardo) and rebirth (by transforming them into paths to enlightenment), and for transforming all mundane daily experiences into higher spiritual paths. Origin and Lineage Vajrayoginī's sādhanā originated in the Himalayan region between the tenth and twelfth centuries. It evolved from the Cakrasaṃvara Tantra, where Vajrayoginī appears as his Yab-Yum consort, to beco

Let's Have a Real Discussion Here - Does Vajrayana Really Works?

Popular comment · reading Dharma benefits you by giving you true teachings on the nature of mind and reality which permeates throughout your life, that is the blessing. There are more blessing that may follow, but a closed off person is not receptive to them, thus they are “secret” does controlling your anger release you from suffering for yourself and others? Does defeating the enemy wrongdoing or controlling your cravings which bind you to samsara? The Dharma is a blessing. * Mantras interact with the energy system of the body and carry positive energy if done correctly, thus, many spiritual benefits come from them. 2b) karmic purification takes place in the mindstream, you are thinking of the westernized misrepresentation of Karma, the type of karmic purification from mantra and preliminaries is mostly inner. You can plainly observe this. If you need more explanation, feel free to ask. * negative karma requires multiple facets to fulfill , if you aren’t aware that you’re doing them wrong or you have a lapse in judgement, the negative karma isn’t as strong, prostrations are a positive practice that help to subdue the ego and self cherishing mind. 3b no... it’s not better to “just not be Buddhist” because you will eventually be faced with your negative karma one way or another and ignoring practice is only allowing it to build and snowball. * I myself went from having $0 and being miserable living on the streets to making 60k+ per year with a home and vehicle through Buddhist practice.. there’s your “proof of material benefit” story. It is not always a benefit in the dualistic sense and your practice must be sincere as well as your samaya * this is a misunderstanding and over generalization therefore it needs no explaining. A lay practitioner should mostly be concerned with the intent and nature of craving behind their sexual activity. Further restriction of sexual activity and sexual practices are for people with empowerment or monastics. * I'm not really sure what you're getting at with this question but it seems to be that if something increases the merit of a virtuous act - why is it not required. There are various practices within Vajrayana and none of it is automatically required, it is more about what fits and benefits the practitioner at where they are in their journey, it's also not something everyone can automatically do. Hope this clears up your confusion and criticism of Vajrayana. I'm really curious what you mean by "does it work" if you could clarify that. It's like asking "does 2+2 work?". Buddhism is based purely on logic and reason. Cultivating wisdom and compassion makes you wiser and more compassionate. Not acting from self grasping or craving/ignorance reduces suffering. These are plain observable facts, there is no question of "if they work". It's not a self help program to help you with worldly pursuits. It's a means of mind training, practice, and study for liberation of suffering & cyclic existence for yourself and others completely.

In Vajrayana Buddhism, Vajradhara and Vajradharma may appear similar, yet each carries a profoundly unique role. Vajradhara - the primordial Buddha - embodies the very essence of enlightenment and transmits the sacred tantric teachings.

Vajradharma, in turn, reveals how that ultimate truth unfolds in our spiritual practice, guiding us step by step. Though often mistaken for one another, recognizing their subtle differences opens a deeper doorway to wisdom, compassion, and the transformative journey toward enlightenment. Vajrayāna (Sanskrit: वज्रयान, lit. 'Diamond Vehicle or Thunderbolt Vehicle'), otherwise known as Mantrayāna ("Mantra Vehicle"), Guhyamantrayāna ("Secret Mantra Vehicle"), Tantrayāna ("Tantra Vehicle"), Indo-Tibetan Buddhism, Tantric Buddhism, and Esoteric Buddhism, is a Mahāyāna Buddhist tradition that emphasizes esoteric practices and rituals aimed at rapid spiritual awakening. Emerging between the 5th and 7th centuries CE in medieval India,[1] Vajrayāna Buddhism incorporates a range of techniques, including the use of mantras (sacred sounds), dhāraṇīs (mnemonic codes), mudrās (symbolic hand gestures), mandalās (spiritual diagrams), and the visualization of deities and Buddhas. These practices are designed to transform ordinary experiences into spiritual paths toward enlightenment and liberation, often by engaging with aspects of desire and aversion in a ritualized context.

A distinctive feature of Vajrayāna Buddhism is its emphasis on esoteric transmission, where teachings are passed directly from teacher (guru or vajrācārya) to student through initiation ceremonies.[2] Tradition asserts that these teachings have been passed down through an unbroken lineage going back to the historical Buddha (c. the 5th century BCE), sometimes via other Buddhas or bodhisattvas (e.g., Vajrapani).[3]

This lineage-based transmission ensures the preservation of the purity and effectiveness of the teachings. Practitioners often engage in deity yoga, a meditative practice where one visualizes oneself as a deity embodying enlightened qualities to transform one's perception of reality. The tradition also acknowledges the role of feminine energy, venerating female Buddhas and ḍākiṇīs (spiritual beings), and sometimes incorporates practices that challenge conventional norms to transcend dualistic thinking.

Vajrayāna has given rise to various sub-traditions across Asia. In Tibet, it evolved into Tibetan Buddhism, which became the dominant spiritual tradition, integrating local beliefs and practices. In Japan, it influenced Shingon Buddhism, established by Kūkai, emphasizing the use of mantras and rituals. Chinese Esoteric Buddhism also emerged, blending Vajrayāna practices with existing Chinese Buddhist traditions, however this is no longer a separate sect and has mostly mixed in with normal exoteric Buddhism. Each of these traditions adapted Vajrayāna principles to its cultural context while maintaining core esoteric practices aimed at achieving enlightenment.

Central to Vajrayāna symbolism is the vajra, a ritual implement representing indestructibility and irresistible force, embodying the union of transcendental wisdom and compassion.[4] Practitioners often use the vajra in conjunction with a bell during rituals, symbolizing the integration of male and female principles. The tradition also employs rich visual imagery, including mudrās, complex mandalās, and depictions of wrathful deities that serve as meditation aids to help practitioners internalize spiritual concepts and confront inner obstacles on the path to enlightenment.

Terminology

A vajra and bell (ghanta), which are classic ritual symbols of Vajrayāna Buddhism. In medieval India, the initial terms that were used to refer to the tantric Buddhist tradition were Mantranāya ("Path of Mantras") and Mantrayāna ("Mantra Vehicle").[5] Later, other terms were adopted, like Vajrayāna ("Diamond Vehicle" or "Thunderbolt Vehicle").

In Tibetan Buddhism practiced in the Himalayan regions of India, Nepal, Tibet, and Bhutan, Buddhist Tantra is most often termed Vajrayāna (Tib. དྷེ་ཐཱ་ག་པ་, dorje tekpa, Wyl. rdo rje theg pa) and Secret mantra (Skt. Guhyamantra, Tib. གསང་སྒྲུགས་, sang ngak, Wyl. gsang sngags). The vajra is a mythical weapon associated with Indra that was said to be indestructible and unbreakable (like a diamond)[4] and extremely powerful (like a thunder). Thus, the term is variously translated as Diamond Vehicle, Thunderbolt Vehicle, Indestructible Vehicle, and so on.

The vajra, or diamond, is an adamantine symbol. A diamond has two qualities: it has the power to shatter all ordinary stones, and conversely, no stone can break a diamond. The actual vajra is the mind that has the realization of the ultimate truth inseparably merged with a special kind of tantric bliss. [...] That is why the vajra, or diamond, is the symbol of the tantric path and its result: the wisdom of nondual emptiness and bliss.[4]

In Chinese Esoteric Buddhism, it is generally known by terms such as Zhēnyán (Chinese: 真言, literally "true word", referring to mantra), Tángmì or Hānmì (唐密 - 漢密, "Tang Esotericism" or "Han Esotericism"), Mìzōng (密宗, "Esoteric Sect"), or Mìjiào (Chinese: 密教; Esoteric Teaching). The Chinese term mì 密 ("secret, esoteric") is a translation of the Sanskrit term Guhya ("secret, hidden, profound, abstruse").[6]

In Japan, Buddhist esotericism is known as Mikkyō (密教, secret teachings) or by the term Shingon (a Japanese rendering of Zhēnyán), which also refers to a specific school of Shingon-shū (真言宗).

The term "Esoteric Buddhism" is first used by Western occultist writers, such as Helena Blavatsky and Alfred Percy Sinnett, to describe theosophical doctrines passed down from "supposedly initiated Buddhist masters." [7]

According to David B. Gray, Vajrayana originated from pre-existing Tantric traditions, also known as 'Tantrism', which emerged within Hinduism during the first millennium CE. These early Hindu tantric practices had a profound influence on South Asian Mahāyāna Buddhism, leading to the development of distinct Buddhist tantric traditions, which arose in the 7th century CE, rapidly spread across Southeast, East, and Central Asia, giving rise to distinct traditions in East Asia and Tibet.[8]

History

Mahasiddhas and the tantric movement

Tantric Buddhism is associated with groups of wandering yogis called mahasiddhas in medieval India.[9] According to Robert Thurman, these tantric figures thrived during the latter half of the first millennium CE.[3] According to John Myrdhin Reynolds, the mahasiddhas date to the medieval period in North India and used methods radically different from those used in Buddhist monasteries, including practicing on charnel grounds.[10]

Since Tantra focuses on the transformation of poisons into wisdom, the yogic circles came together in tantric feasts, often in sacred sites (pitha) and places (ksetra), which included dancing, singing, consort practices, and the ingestion of taboo substances like alcohol, urine, and meat.[11] At least two of the mahasiddhas cited in the Buddhist literature are comparable with the Shaiva Nath saints (Gorakshanath and Matsyendranath) who practiced Hatha Yoga.

According to Schumann, a movement called Sahaja-siddhi developed in the 8th century in Bengal.[12] It was dominated by long-haired, wandering mahasiddhas who openly challenged and ridiculed the Buddhist establishment.[13] The mahasiddhas pursued siddhis, magical powers such as flight and extrasensory perception as well as spiritual liberation.[14][15]

Tantras

Mahāyāna sutras contain "proto-tantric" material, such as the Gandavyuha and the Dasabhumika, which might have served as a central source of visual imagery for Tantric texts.[16] Later Mahāyāna texts like the Kāraṇḍavyūha Sūtra (c. 4th–5th century CE) expound the use of mantras such as Om mani padme hum, associated with vastly powerful beings like Avalokiteshvara. The Heart Sutra also includes a mantra.

Vajrayāna Buddhists developed a large corpus of texts, the Buddhist Tantras, some of which can be traced to at least the 7th century CE but might be older. The dating of the tantras is "a difficult, indeed an impossible task", according to David Snellgrove.[17]

Some of the earliest of these texts, Kriya tantras such as the Mañjuśrī-mūla-kalpa (c. 6th century), teach the use of mantras and dharanis for mostly worldly ends, including curing illness, controlling the weather and generating wealth.[18] The Tattvasaṃgraha Tantra (Compendium of Principles), classed as a "Yoga tantra", is one of the first Buddhist tantras that focuses on liberation as opposed to worldly goals. In another early tantra, the Vajrasekhara (Vajra Peak), the influential schema of the five Buddha families is developed.[19] Other early tantras include the Mahāvairocana Abhisambodhi and the Guhyasamāja (Gathering of Secrets).[20]

The Guhyasamāja is a Mahayoga class of Tantra, which features forms of ritual practice considered "left-hand" (vamachara), such as use of taboo substances like alcohol, consort practices, and charnel ground practices that evoke wrathful deities.[21] Ryujun Tajima divides the tantras into those that were "a development of Mahāyānist thought" and those "formed in a rather popular mould toward the end of the eighth century and declining into the esoterism of the left".[22] This "left esoterism" mainly refers to the Yogini tantras and later works associated with wandering yogis. This practice survives in

Tibetan Buddhism, but it is rare for this to be done with an actual person. It is more common for a yogi or yogini to use an imagined consort (a buddhist tantric deity, i.e. a yidam).[23]

Later tantras such as the Hevajra Tantra and the Chakrasamvara are classed as "Yogini tantras" and represent the final form of development of Indian Buddhist tantras in the ninth and tenth centuries.[18] The Kalachakra tantra developed in the 10th century.[24] It is farthest removed from the earlier Buddhist traditions, and incorporates concepts of messianism and astrology not present elsewhere in Buddhist literature.[13]

According to Ronald M. Davidson, the rise of Tantric Buddhism was a response to the feudal structure of Indian society in the early medieval period (ca. 500–1200 CE), which saw kings divinized as manifestations of gods. Likewise, tantric yogis reconfigured their practice through the metaphor of being consecrated (abhiśeka) as the overlord (rājādhirāja) of a mandala palace of divine vassals, an imperial metaphor symbolizing kingly fortresses and their political power.[25]

Relationship to Shaivism

Further information: Kashmir Shaivism

Vajrayana adopted deities such as Bhairava, known as Yamantaka in Tibetan Buddhism.

The central deity of the Cakrasamvara Tantra, which, according to scholars like David B. Gray and Alexis Sanderson, appropriated numerous elements from nondual Shaiva Tantra

The question of the origins of early Vajrayāna has been taken up by various scholars. David Seyfort Ruegg has suggested that Buddhist tantra employed various elements of a "pan-Indian religious substrate" that is not specifically Buddhist, Shaiva or Vaishnava. [26]

According to Alexis Sanderson, various classes of Vajrayāna literature developed as a result of royal courts sponsoring both Buddhism and Shaivism.[27] The relationship between the two systems can be seen in texts like the Mañjusrimulakalpa, which later came to be classified under Kriya tantra, and states that mantras taught in the Shaiva, Garuda, and Vaishnava tantras will be effective if applied by Buddhists since they were all taught originally by Manjushri.[28]

Sanderson notes that the Vajrayāna Yogini tantras draw extensively from the material also present in Shaiva Bhairava tantras classified as Vidyapitha. Sanderson's comparison of them shows similarity in "ritual procedures, style of observance, deities, mantras, mandalas, ritual dress, Kapalika accouterments like skull bowls, specialized terminology, secret gestures, and secret jargons. There is even direct borrowing of passages from Shaiva texts." [29] Sanderson gives numerous examples, such as the Guhyasiddhi of Padmavajra, a work associated with the Guhyasamaja tradition, which prescribes acting as a Shaiva guru and initiating members into Saiva Siddhanta scriptures and mandalas.[30] Sanderson says that the Samvara tantra texts adopted the pitha list from the Shaiva text Tantrasadbhāva, introducing a copying error where a deity was mistaken for a place.[31]

Davidson argues that Sanderson's arguments for direct influence from Shaiva Vidyapitha texts are problematic because "the chronology of the Vidyapitha tantras is by no means so well established"[32] and "the available evidence suggests that received Saiva tantras come into evidence sometime in the ninth to tenth centuries with their affirmation by scholars like Abhinavagupta (c. 1000 c.e.)"[33] Davidson also notes that the list of pithas or sacred places is "certainly not particularly Buddhist, nor are they uniquely Kapalika venues, despite their presence in lists employed by both traditions." [34] He adds that, like the Buddhists, the Shaiva tradition was involved in the appropriation of Hindu and non-Hindu deities, texts, and traditions, an example being "village or tribal divinities like Tumburu".[35]

Davidson adds that Buddhists and Kapalikas as well as other ascetics (possibly Pasupatas) mingled and discussed their paths at various pilgrimage places and that there were conversions between the different groups. Thus he concludes:

The Buddhist-Kapalika connection is more complex than a simple process of religious imitation and textual appropriation. There can be no question that the Buddhist tantras were heavily influenced by Kapalika and other Saiva movements, but the influence was apparently mutual. Perhaps a more nuanced model would be that the various lines of transmission were locally flourishing and that in some areas they interacted, while in others they maintained concerted hostility. Thus the influence was both sustained and reciprocal, even in those places where Buddhist and Kapalika siddhas were in extreme antagonism.[36]

Davidson also argues for the influence of non-Brahmanical and outcaste tribal religions and their feminine deities (such as Parnasabari and Janguli).[37]

Traditional legends

According to several Buddhist tantras as well as traditional Tibetan Buddhist sources, the Vajrayana tantras were taught by the Buddha Shakyamuni, but only to some individuals. There are several stories and versions of how the tantras were disseminated. The Jñāna Tilaka Tantra, for example, has the Buddha say that the tantras will be explained by the bodhisattva Vajrapani. One of the most famous legends is that of king Indrabhūti (also known as King Ja) of Oddiyana (a figure related to Vajrapani, in some cases said to be an emanation of him).[38]

Other accounts attribute the revelation of Buddhist tantras to Padmasambhava, saying that he was an emanation of Amitabha and Avalokiteshvara and that the Buddha predicted his arrival. Some accounts also maintain Padmasambhava is a direct reincarnation of Buddha Shakyamuni.[39]

Philosophical background

Nalanda Mahavihara, a major center for the study of Vajrayana philosophy during the Pala era.

According to Alex Wayman, the philosophical view of Vajrayana is based on Mahayana Buddhist philosophy, mainly the Madhyamaka and Yogacara schools.[40] The major difference seen by Vajrayana thinkers is the superiority of Tantric methods, which provide a faster vehicle to liberation and contain many more skillful means (upaya).

The importance of the theory of emptiness is central to the Tantric Buddhist view and practice. The Buddhist emptiness view sees the world as fluid, without an ontological foundation or inherent existence, but ultimately a fabric of constructions. Because of this, tantric practice such as self-visualization as the deity is seen as no less real than everyday reality, but a process of transforming reality itself, including the practitioner's identity as the deity. Stephan Beyer notes, "In a universe where all events dissolve ontologically into Emptiness, the touching of Emptiness in the ritual is the re-creation of the world in actuality".[41]

The doctrine of Buddha-nature, as outlined in the Ratnagotravibhāga of Asanga, was also an important theory that became the basis for Tantric views.[42] As explained by the Tantric commentator Lilavajra, this "intrinsic secret [behind] diverse manifestation" is Tantra's utmost secret and aim. According to Wayman, this "Buddha embryo" (tathāgatagarbha) is a "non-dual, self-originated Wisdom (jnana), an effortless fount of good qualities" that resides in the mindstream but is "obscured by discursive thought".[43] This doctrine is often associated with the idea of inherent or natural luminosity (Skt: prakṛti-prabhāsvara-citta, T. 'od gsal gyi sems) or purity of the mind (prakṛti-parisuddha).

Another fundamental theory of Tantric practice is that of transformation. In Vajrayāna, negative mental factors such as desire, hatred, greed, and pride are used as part of the path. As French Indologist Madeleine Biardeau notes, the tantric doctrine is "an attempt to place kama, desire, in every meaning of the word, in the service of liberation." [44] This view is outlined in the following passage from the Hevajra tantra:

Those things by which evil men are bound, others turn into means and gain thereby release from the bonds of existence. By passion the world is bound, by passion too it is released, but by heretical Buddhists this practice of reversals is not known.[45]

The Hevajra further states that "one knowing the nature of poison may dispel poison with poison." [44] As Snellgrove notes, this idea is already present in Asanga's Mahayana-sutra-alamkara-karika and therefore it is possible that he was aware of Tantric techniques, including sexual yoga.[46]

According to Buddhist Tantra, there is no strict separation of the profane or samsara and the sacred or nirvana; rather, they exist in a continuum. Everyone is seen as containing the seed of enlightenment, which is covered over by defilements. Douglas Duckworth notes that Vajrayana sees Buddhahood not as something outside or an event in the future, but as immanently present.[47]

Indian Tantric Buddhist philosophers such as Buddhaguhya, Vimalamitra, Ratnākaraśānti, and Abhayakaragupta continued the tradition of Buddhist philosophy and adapted it to their commentaries on the major Tantras. Abhayakaragupta's Vajravalī is a key source in the theory and practice of tantric rituals. After monks such as Vajrabodhi and Śubhakarasiṃha brought Tantra to Tang China (716 to 720), tantric philosophy continued to be developed in Chinese and Japanese by thinkers such as Yi Xing and Kūkai.

Likewise in Tibet, Sakya Pandita (1182–28 – 1251), as well as later thinkers like Longchenpa (1308–1364) expanded on these philosophies in their tantric commentaries and treatises. The status of the tantric view continued to be debated in medieval Tibet. Tibetan Buddhist Rongzom Chokyi Zangpo (1012–1088) held that the views of sutra such as Madhyamaka were inferior to that of tantra, which was based on basic purity of ultimate reality.[48] Tsongkhapa (1357–1419), on the other hand, held that there is no difference between Vajrayāna and other forms of Mahayana in terms of prajnaparamita (perfection of insight) itself, only that Vajrayāna works faster.[49]

Place within Buddhist tradition

Tantric Auspicious Tantra of All-Reaching Union

Various classifications distinguish Vajrayāna from other Buddhist traditions. Vajrayāna can be seen as a third yana, next to Śrāvakayāna and Mahayana.[13] Vajrayāna can be distinguished from Sutrayana. Sutrayana is the method of perfecting good qualities, where Vajrayāna is the method of taking the intended outcome of Buddhahood as the path. Vajrayāna can also be distinguished from the paramitayana. According to this schema, Indian Mahayana revealed two vehicles (yana) or methods for attaining enlightenment: the method of the perfections (Paramitayana) and the method of mantra (Mantrayana).[50]

The Paramitayana consists of the six or ten paramitas, of which the scriptures say that it takes three incalculable aeons to lead one to Buddhahood. The tantra literature, on the other hand, says that Mantrayana leads one to Buddhahood in a single lifetime.[50]

According to the literature, the mantra is an easy path without the difficulties of Paramitayana.[50] Mantrayana is sometimes portrayed as a method for those of inferior abilities,[50] but the practitioner of mantra must still adhere to the Bodhisattva vow.[50]

Goal

The goal of spiritual practice in the Mahayana and Vajrayāna traditions is to become a Sammāsambuddha (fully awakened Buddha); those on this path are termed Bodhisattvas. As with the Mahayana, motivation is a vital component of Vajrayāna practice. The Bodhisattva-path is an integral part of Vajrayāna, which teaches that all practices are to be undertaken with the motivation to achieve Buddhahood for the benefit of all sentient beings.

In the vehicle of Sutra Mahayana, the "path of the cause" is taken whereby a practitioner starts with his or her potential Buddha-nature and nurtures it to produce the fruit of Buddhahood. In Vajrayāna, the "path of the fruit" is taken whereby the practitioner takes his or her innate Buddha-nature as the means of practice. Experiencing ultimate truth is said to be the purpose of all the various tantric techniques practiced in Vajrayana.[51]

Esoteric transmission

Main article: Esoteric transmission

Vajrayāna Buddhism is esoteric in the sense that the transmission of certain teachings occurs only from teacher to student during an empowerment (abhiṣeka), and their practice requires initiation in a ritual space containing the mandala of the deity.[52] Because of their role in giving access to the practices and guiding the student through them, the Vajracharya Lama is considered indispensable in Vajrayāna.[53]

The secrecy of teachings was often protected through the use of allusive, indirect, symbolic, and metaphorical language (twilight language) that required interpretation and guidance from a teacher.[54] The teachings may also be considered "self-secret", meaning that even if they were to be told directly to a person, that person would not necessarily understand the teachings without proper context. In this way, the teachings are "secret" to the minds of those who are not following the path with more than simple curiosity.[55][56]

Esler points out that while secrecy is presented as necessary to prevent the teachings from falling into the hands of unworthy recipients, it also serves to demarcate a kind of religious in-group. He observes that from an anthropological perspective, allowing reference to the secret to "remain close to the social surface" through veiled allusions plays a more important role in some ways than the secret content itself, as it mobilizes the secret as a kind of symbolic capital.[57]

Affirmation of the feminine, antinomian and taboo

Some Vajrayāna rituals traditionally included the use of certain taboo substances, such as blood, semen, alcohol, and urine, as ritual offerings and sacraments, though some of these are often replaced with less taboo substances such as yogurt. Tantric feasts and initiations sometimes employed substances like human flesh, as noted by Kahha's Yogaratnamala.[58]

The use of these substances is related to the non-dual (advaya) nature of a Buddha's wisdom (buddhajñana). Since the ultimate state is in some sense non-dual, a practitioner can approach that state by "transcending attachment to dual categories such as pure and impure, permitted and forbidden". As the Guhyasamaja Tantra states, "the wise man who does not discriminate achieves Buddhahood".[58]

Vajrayāna rituals also include sexual yoga, union with a physical consort as part of advanced practices. Some tantras go further: the Hevajra tantra states, "You should kill living beings, speak lying words, take what is not given, consort with the women of others".[58] While some of these statements were taken literally as part of ritual practice, others, such as killing, were interpreted metaphorically. In the Hevajra, "killing" is defined as developing concentration by killing the life-breath of discursive thoughts.[59] Likewise, while actual sexual union with a physical consort is practiced, it is also common to use a visualized consort.[citation needed]

Wayman points out that the symbolic meaning of tantric sexuality is ultimately rooted in bodhicitta and the bodhisattva's quest for enlightenment is likened to a lover seeking union with the mind of the Buddha.[60] Judith Simmer-Brown notes the importance of the psycho-physical experiences arising in sexual yoga, termed "great bliss" (mahasukha): "Bliss melts the conceptual mind, heightens sensory awareness, and opens the practitioner to the naked experience of the nature of mind."[61] This tantric experience is not the same as ordinary self-gratifying sexual passion since it relies on tantric meditative methods using the illusory body and visualizations as well as the motivation for enlightenment.[62] The Hevajra tantra says:

This practice [of sexual union with a consort] is not taught for the sake of enjoyment, but for the examination of one's own thought, whether the mind is steady or waving.[63]

Feminine deities and forces are a major element of Vajrayāna. In the Yogini tantras in particular, women and female yoginis are given high status as the embodiment of female deities such as the wild and nude Vajrayogini.[64] The Candamaharosana Tantra (viii:29–30) states:

Women are heaven, women are the teaching (dharma)
Women indeed are the highest austerity (tapas)
Women are the Buddha, women are the Sangha
Women are the Perfection of Wisdom.[64]

In India, there is evidence that women participated in tantric practice alongside men and were also teachers, adepts, and authors of tantric texts.[65]

Vows and behaviour

Main article: Samaya

Practitioners of Vajrayāna must abide by various tantric vows or pledges called samaya.

These are extensions of the rules of the Prātimokṣa and Bodhisattva vows for the lower levels of tantra, and are taken during initiations into the empowerment for a particular Unsurpassed Yoga Tantra. The special tantric vows vary depending on the specific mandala practice for which the initiation is received and on the level of initiation. Ngagpas of the Nyingma school keep a special non-celibate ordination.

A tantric guru, or teacher, is expected to keep his or her samaya vows in the same way as his students. Proper conduct is considered especially necessary for a qualified Vajrayana guru. For example, the Ornament for the Essence of Manjushrikirti states:

Distance yourself from Vajra Masters who are not keeping the three vows who keep on with a root downfall, who are miserly with the Dharma, and who engage in actions that should be forsaken.
Those who worship them go to hell and so on as a result.[66]

While all Vajrayāna Buddhist traditions include all the traditional practices used in Mahayana Buddhism, such as developing bodhicitta, practicing the paramitas, and meditations, they also make use of unique tantric methods and Dzogchen meditation, which are seen as more advanced. These include mantras, mandalas, mudras, deity yoga, other visualization-based meditations, illusory body yogas like tummo, and rituals like the goma fire ritual. Vajrayana teaches that these techniques provide a faster path to Buddhahood.[67]

A central feature of tantric practice is the use of mantras and seed syllables (bijas). Mantras are words, phrases, or a collection of syllables used for various meditative, magical, and ritual ends. Mantras are usually associated with specific deities or Buddhas, and are seen as their manifestations in sonic form. They are traditionally believed to have spiritual power, which can lead to enlightenment as well as supramundane abilities (siddhis).[68]

According to Indologist Alex Wayman, Buddhist esotericism centers on what is known as "the three mysteries" or "secrets": the tantric adept affiliates his body, speech, and mind with the body, speech, and mind of a Buddha through mudra, mantras, and samadhi, respectively.[69] Padmavajra (c. 7th century) explains in his Tantrarthavatara Commentary, the secret Body, Speech, and Mind of the Buddhas are:[70]

Secret of Body: Whatever form is necessary to tame the living beings.

Secret of Speech: Speech exactly appropriate to the lineage of the creature, as in the language of the yaksas, etc.

Secret of Mind: Knowing all things as they really are.

These elements are brought together in the practice of tantric deity yoga, which involves visualizing the deity's body and mandala, reciting the deity's mantra, and gaining insight into the nature of things based on this contemplation. Advanced tantric practices such as deity yoga are taught in the context of an initiation ceremony by tantric gurus or vajracharyas (vajra-masters) to the tantric initiate, who also takes on formal commitments or vows (samaya).[68] In Tibetan Buddhism, advanced practices like deity yoga are usually preceded by or coupled with "preliminary practices" called ngondro, consisting of five to seven accumulation practices and includes prostrations and recitations of the 100 syllable mantra.[71]

Vajrayana is a system of tantric lineages, and thus only those who receive an empowerment or initiation (abhiseka) may practice the more advanced esoteric methods. In tantric deity yoga, mantras, or bijas are used during the ritual evocation of deities that are said to arise out of the uttered and visualized mantric syllables. After the deity's image and mandala has been established, heart mantras are visualized as part of the contemplation in different points of the deity's body.[72]

Most Tantric Buddhists believe nirvana is achievable in a single lifetime with "vigorous study and meditation".[73]

Deity yoga

A Japanese depiction of the Amida Triad in Seed Syllable form (Siddham Script). Visualizing deities in the form of seed syllables is a common Vajrayana meditation. In Shingon, one of the most common practices is Ajikan (阿字觀), meditating on the syllable A.

The fundamental practice of Buddhist Tantra is "deity yoga" (devatayoga), meditation on a chosen deity or "cherished divinity" (Skt. Iṣṭa-devatā, Tib. yidam), which involves the recitation of mantras and prayers and visualization of the deity, the associated mandala of the deity's Buddha field, along with consorts and attendant Buddhas and bodhisattvas.[74] According to the Tibetan scholar Tsongkhapa, deity yoga separates Tantra from Sutra practice.[75]

In the Unsurpassed Yoga Tantras, the most widespread tantric form in Indo-Tibetan Buddhism, this method is divided into two stages, generation (utpatti-krama) and completion (nispanna-krama). In the generation stage, one dissolves one's reality into emptiness and meditates on the deity-mandala, resulting in identification with this divine reality. During deity visualization, the deity is to be imagined as not solid or tangible, as "empty yet apparent", with the character of a mirage or a rainbow.[76]

This visualization is to be combined with "divine pride", which is "the thought that one is oneself the deity being visualized." [77] Divine pride is different from common pride because it is based on compassion for others and an understanding of emptiness. [78] The divine image along with the illusory body is then dissolved into luminous emptiness. This dissolution into emptiness is then followed by the visualization of the deity and the yogi's re-emergence as the deity. [77] This practice is repeated over a number of daily sessions. The practitioner proceeds to the completion state after completing a requisite number of mantra repetitions, either defined in the text or given by the empowering lama. [79]

A Tibetan depiction of the perfection stage practices of tummo (Skt. candali, inner heat) and phowa (transference of consciousness)

The Tibetologist David Germano outlines two main types of completion practice: a formless and image-less contemplation on the ultimate empty nature of the mind and various yogas that make use of the illusory body to produce energetic sensations of bliss and warmth. [80] The illusory body yogas systems like the Six Dharmas of Naropa and the Six Yogas of Kalachakra make use of energetic schemas of human psycho-physiology composed of "energy channels" (Skt. nadi, Tib. rtsa), "winds" or currents (Skt. vayu, Tib. rlung), "drops" or charged particles (Skt. bindu, Tib. thig le), and chakras ("wheels"). These subtle energies are seen as "mounts" for consciousness, the physical component of awareness. They are engaged by various means such as pranayama (breath control) to produce blissful experiences that are then applied to the realization of ultimate reality. [81]

Other methods associated with the completion stage in Tibetan Buddhism include dream yoga (which relies on lucid dreaming), practices associated with the bardo (the interim state between death and rebirth), transference of consciousness (phowa), and Chöd, in which the yogi ceremonially offers their body to be eaten by tantric deities in a ritual feast.

Other practices

Another form of Vajrayana practice are certain meditative techniques associated with Mahāmudrā and Dzogchen, often termed "formless practices" or the path of self-liberation. These techniques do not rely on deity visualization per se but on direct pointing-out instruction from a master, and are often seen as the most advanced and direct methods. [82]

Another distinctive feature of Tantric Buddhism is its unique and often elaborate rituals. They include pujas (worship rituals), prayer festivals, protection rituals, death rituals, tantric feasts (ganachakra), tantric initiations (abhiseka) and the goma fire ritual (common in East Asian Esotericism).

A video of the Cham dance, a traditional practice in some sects of Tibetan Buddhism. An important element in some of these rituals (particularly initiations and tantric feasts) seems to have been the practice of ritual sex or sexual yoga (karmamudra, "desire seal", also called "consort observance", vidyavrata, and euphemistically as "puja"), as well as the sacramental ingestion of "power substances" such as the mingled sexual fluids and uterine blood (often performed by licking these substances off the vulva, a practice termed yonipuja).[83]

The practice of ingestion of sexual fluids is mentioned by numerous tantric commentators, sometimes euphemistically referring to the penis as the "vajra" and the vagina as the "lotus". The Cakrasamvara Tantra commentator Kambala, writing about this practice, states:

The seats are well-known on earth to be spots within the lotus mandala; by abiding within it there is great bliss, the royal nature of nondual joy. Therefore the lotus seat is supreme: filled with a mixture of semen and uterine blood, one should especially kiss it, and lolling with the tongue take it up. Unite the vajra and lotus, with the rapture of drinking [this] liquor.[84]

According to David Gray, these sexual practices probably originated in a non-monastic context and were later adopted by monastic establishments (such as Nalanda and Vikramashila). He notes that the anxiety of figures like Atisa about these practices, and the stories of Virūpa and Maitripa being expelled from their monasteries for performing them, shows that supposedly celibate monastics were undertaking these sexual rites. [85]

Because of its adoption by the monastic tradition, sexual yoga slowly became either done with an imaginary consort visualized by the yogi instead of an actual person, or reserved to a small group of the "highest" or elite practitioners. Likewise, the drinking of sexual fluids was also reinterpreted by later commentators to refer to illusory body anatomy of the perfection stage practices.[86]

Symbols and imagery

Vajrayāna uses a rich variety of symbols, terms, and images that have multiple meanings according to a complex system of analogical thinking. In Vajrayāna, symbols, and terms are multi-valent, reflecting the microcosm and the macrocosm as in the phrase "As without, so within" (yatha bahyam tatha 'dhyatmam iti) from Abhayakaragupta's Nispannayogavali. [87]

The vajra

Bronze vajras and bell from Itsukushima, Japan

The Sanskrit term "vajra" denoted a thunderbolt like a legendary weapon and divine attribute that was made from an adamantine, or an indestructible substance which could, therefore, pierce and penetrate any obstacle or obfuscation. It is the weapon of choice of Indra, the King of the Devas. As a secondary meaning, "vajra" symbolizes the ultimate nature of things which is described in the tantras as translucent, pure and radiant, but also indestructible and indivisible. It is also symbolic of the power of tantric methods to achieve its goals.[88]

A vajra is also a scepter-like ritual object (Standard Tibetan: རྡོ་རྗེ་ dorje), which has a sphere (and sometimes a gankyil) at its centre, and a variable number of spokes, 3, 5 or 9 at each end (depending on the sadhana), enfolding either end of the rod. The vajra is often traditionally employed in tantric rituals in combination with the bell or ghanta; symbolically, the vajra may represent method as well as great bliss and the bell stands for wisdom, specifically the wisdom realizing emptiness. The union of the two sets of spokes at the center of the wheel is said to symbolize the unity of wisdom (prajña) and compassion (karuna) as well as the sexual union of male and female deities.[89]

Imagery and ritual in deity yoga

Chöd ritual, showing the use of Damaru drum and hand-bell, as well as the Kangling (thighbone trumpet)

Representations of the deity, such as statues (murti), paintings (thangka), or mandala, are often employed as an aid to visualization, in deity yoga. The use of visual aids, particularly microcosmic/macrocosmic diagrams, known as mandalas, is another unique feature of Buddhist Tantra. Mandalas are symbolic depictions of the sacred space of the awakened Buddhas and Bodhisattvas as well as of the inner workings of the human person.[90] The macrocosmic symbolism of the mandala then, also represents the forces of the human body. The explanatory tantra of the Guhyasamaja tantra, the Vajramala, states: "The body becomes a palace, the hallowed basis of all the Buddhas." [91]

Mandalas are also sacred enclosures, sacred architecture that house and contain the uncontainable essence of a central deity or yidam and their retinue. In the book The World of Tibetan Buddhism, the Dalai Lama describes mandalas thus: "This is the celestial mansion, the pure residence of the deity." The Five Tathagatas or 'Five Buddhas', along with the figure of the Adi-Buddha, are central to many Vajrayana mandalas as they represent the "five wisdoms", which are the five primary aspects of primordial wisdom or Buddha-nature.[92]

All ritual in Vajrayana practice can be seen as aiding in this process of visualization and identification. The practitioner can use various hand implements such as a vajra, bell, hand-drum (damaru) or a ritual dagger (phurba), but also ritual hand gestures (mudras) can be made, special chanting techniques can be used, and in elaborate offering rituals or initiations, many more ritual implements and tools are used, each with an elaborate symbolic meaning to create a special environment for practice. Vajrayana has thus become a major inspiration in traditional Tibetan art.

Texts

See also: Tantras (Buddhism) and Tibetan Buddhist canon

There is an extended body of texts associated with Buddhist Tantra, including the "tantras" themselves, tantric commentaries and shastras, sadhanas (liturgical texts), ritual manuals (Chinese: 儀軌; Pinyin: Yíguǐ; Rōmaji: Giki), dharanis, poems or songs (dohas), termas and so on. According to Harunaga Isaacson,

Though we do not know precisely at present just how many Indian tantric Buddhist texts survive today in the language in which they were written, their number is certainly over one thousand five hundred; I suspect indeed over two thousand. A large part of this body of texts has also been translated into Tibetan, and a smaller part into Chinese. Aside from these, there are perhaps another two thousand or more works that are known today only from such translations. We can be certain as well that many others are lost to us forever, in whatever form. Of the texts that survive a very small proportion has been published; an almost insignificant percentage has been edited or translated reliably.[93]

Vajrayāna texts exhibit a wide range of literary characteristics—usually a mix of verse and prose, almost always in a Sanskrit that "transgresses frequently against classical norms of grammar and usage," although also occasionally in various Middle Indic dialects or elegant classical Sanskrit.[93]

In Chinese Mantrayana (Zhenyan), and Japanese Shingon, the most influential esoteric texts are the Mahavairocana Tantra and the Vajraśekhara Sūtra.[94][95]

In Tibetan Buddhism, a large number of tantric works are widely studied and different schools focus on the study and practice of different cycles of texts. According to Geoffrey Samuel, the Sakyapa specialize in the Hevajra Tantra, the Nyingmapa specialize in the various so called Old Tantras and terma cycles, and the most important Kagyudpa and Gelugpa tantras are Guhyasamāja, Cakrasaṃvara and Kālacakra.[96]

Dunhuang manuscripts

The Dunhuang manuscripts also contain Tibetan Tantric manuscripts. Dalton and Schaik (2007, revised) provide an excellent online catalogue listing 350 Tibetan Tantric Manuscripts] from Dunhuang in the Stein Collection of the British Library which is currently fully accessible online in discrete digitized manuscripts.[97] With the Wylie transcription of the manuscripts they are to be made discoverable online in the future. [98] These 350 texts are just a small portion of the vast cache of the Dunhuang manuscripts.

Traditions

Although there is historical evidence for Vajrayāna Buddhism in Southeast Asia and elsewhere (see History of Vajrayāna above), today Vajrayāna exists primarily in the form of the two major traditions of Indo-Tibetan Buddhism (in Tibet and other parts of the PRC, Bhutan, India and also internationally) and Japanese Esoteric Buddhism (mostly in Japan), which is found in the Shingon (literally "True Speech", i.e. mantra) and Tendai schools.

Other traditions like contemporary Chinese Buddhism, Japanese Zen, Korean Buddhism, and Vietnamese Buddhism also make use of esoteric (Chinese: mijiao, Japanese: mikkyo) or mantrayana methods to a lesser extent. In many Asian Mahayana Buddhist traditions, esoteric methods are used as a complement, not as the central practice. This mainly involves the recitation of mantras (like the ten small mantras) and various popular dharanis. However, certain revival movements have attempted to establish new esoteric schools in mainland East Asia such as Mantra School Bright Lineage (in China) and the South Korean Jingak Order.

There was strong connection between the Palas in Bengal, Srivijaya in Nusantara, and the kingdoms in East Asia through the sea route. Medieval monks were a prime factor in the spread of esoteric Buddhism.[99]

A map depicting the spread of Esoteric Buddhism in Southeast and Eastern Eurasia
The distinction between mantrayana traditions is not always rigid. For example, the tantra sections of the Tibetan Buddhist canon of texts sometimes include material not usually thought of as tantric outside the Tibetan Buddhist tradition, such as the widely recited Heart Sutra[100] and even versions of some material found in the Pali Canon.[a]

Chinese Esoteric Buddhism

(Mantrayana) tradition.

Esoteric and Tantric teachings followed the same route into northern China as Buddhism itself, arriving via the Silk Road and Southeast Asian Maritime trade routes sometime during the first half of the 7th century, during the Tang dynasty and received sanction from the emperors of the Tang dynasty. During this time, three great masters came from India to China: Śubhakarasiṃha, Vajrabodhi, and Amoghavajra who translated key texts and founded the Zhenyan (真言, "true word", "mantra") tradition.[101]

Zhenyan was also brought to Japan as Shingon during this period. This tradition focused on tantras like the Mahavairocana tantra, and unlike Tibetan Buddhism, it does not employ the antinomian and radical tantrism of the Anuttarayoga Tantras. The prestige of this tradition eventually influenced other schools of Chinese Buddhism such as Chan and Tiantai to adopt various esoteric practices over time, leading to a merging of teachings between the various schools.[102][103][104] During the Yuan dynasty, the Mongol emperors made Tibetan Buddhism the official religion of China, and Tibetan lamas were given patronage at the court.[105] Imperial support of Tibetan Vajrayana continued into the Ming and Qing dynasties.

The vajrācārya of a Yujia Yankou ritual performing a mudrā while wearing a Five Buddha crown adorned with images of the Five Tathāgatas

Today, esoteric traditions are deeply embedded in mainstream Chinese Buddhism and expressed through various rituals which make use of tantric mantra and dhāraṇī and the veneration of certain tantric deities like Cundi and Acala.[106] One example of esoteric teachings still practiced in many Chinese Buddhist monasteries is the Śūraṅgama Sūtra and the dhāraṇī revealed within it, the Śūraṅgama Mantra, which are especially influential in the Chinese Chan tradition.[107] Another example is the popular tantric Yujia Yankou ritual, where monastics take on the role of a vajrācārya and performs deity yoga through the usage of mantras, mudrās and maṇḍala offerings in order to help facilitate the nourishment and ultimate liberation of all sentient beings.[108] In particular, the usage of mantras, mudrās and maṇḍalas in the ritual correspond directly to the concept of the "Three Mysteries" (Chinese: 三密; pinyin: Sānmì) in tantric Buddhism: the "secrets" of body, speech and mind.[108][109] This ritual is commonly performed during or at the end of regular religious temple events such as repentance rites, Buddha recitation retreats, the dedication of a new monastic complex or gatherings for the transmission of monastic vows. It is also widely performed as a post-mortem rite within Chinese society during funerals and other related occasions such as the Ghost Festival. [108] A related ritual that also involves esoteric practices is the extensive Shuilu Fahui ceremony, which involves setting up maṇḍalas of esoteric deities such as the Ten Wisdom Kings as well as the invocation of those deities to the ritual space via mantras, mudrās and visualization.[110][111]

A recent development is known as the "tantric revival movement" (mijiao fuxing yundong 密教復興運動) which involved the revival of Chinese Esoteric schools by Chinese students of Japanese Shingon.[112] Some important figures of this revival include Wang

Hongyuan 王弘願 (1876–1937), and Guru Wuguang (悟光上師 (1918–2000), both trained in Shingon and went on to spread Shingon teachings in the Chinese speaking world.[113][114] These revivalist lineages exist in Hong Kong, Taiwan and Malaysia. Though they draw mainly from Shingon teachings, they have also adopted some Tibetan Buddhist elements.[115]

Another form of esoteric Buddhism in China is the related but unique tradition of Azhaliism, which is practiced among the Bai people of China and venerates Mahakala as a major deity.[116][117]

Shingon Buddhism

Main article: Shingon Buddhism

The Shingon school is found in Japan and includes practices, known in Japan as Mikkyō ("Esoteric (or Mystery) Teaching"), which are similar in concept to those in Vajrayana Buddhism. The lineage for Shingon Buddhism differs from that of Tibetan Vajrayana, having emerged from India during the 9th–11th centuries in the Pala Dynasty and Central Asia (via China) and is based on earlier versions of the Indian texts than the Tibetan lineage. Shingon shares material with Tibetan Buddhism – such as the esoteric sutras (called Tantras in Tibetan Buddhism) and mandalas – but the actual practices are not related.

The primary texts of Shingon Buddhism are the Mahavairocana Sutra and Vajrasekhara Sutra. The founder of Shingon Buddhism was Kukai, a Japanese monk who studied in China in the 9th century during the Tang dynasty and brought back Vajrayana scriptures, techniques and mandalas then popular in China. The school was merged into other schools in China towards the end of the Tang dynasty but was sectarian in Japan. Shingon is one of the few remaining branches of Buddhism in the world that continues to use the siddham script of the Sanskrit language.

Tendai Buddhism

Main article: Tendai

Although the Tendai school in China and Japan does employ some esoteric practices, these rituals came to be considered of equal importance with the exoteric teachings of the Lotus Sutra. By chanting mantras, maintaining mudras, or practicing certain forms of meditation, Tendai maintains that one is able to understand sense experiences as taught by the Buddha, have faith that one is innately an enlightened being, and that one can attain enlightenment within the current lifetime.

Korean milgyo

Esoteric Buddhist practices (known as milgyo, 密教) and texts arrived in Korea during the introduction of Buddhism to the region in 372 CE.[118] Esoteric Buddhism was supported by the royalty of both Unified Silla (668–935) and Goryeo Dynasty (918–1392).[118] During the Goryeo Dynasty esoteric practices were common within large sects like the Seon school and the Hwaeom school as well as smaller esoteric sects like the Sinin (mudra) and Ch'ongji (Dharani) schools. During the era of the Mongol occupation (1251–1350s), Tibetan Buddhism also existed in Korea, though it never gained a foothold there.[119]

During the Joseon dynasty, Esoteric Buddhist schools were forced to merge with the Seon and Kyo schools, becoming the ritual specialists. With the decline of Buddhism in Korea, Esoteric Buddhism mostly died out, save for a few traces in the rituals of the Jogye Order and Taego Order.[119]

There are now five esoteric Buddhist schools in South Korea: Jingak Order, Jineon Order, Chongji Order, Jisong Order, and Cheonhwa Buddhism.[120] According to Henrik H. Sørensen, the Jineon and Jingak Orders "have absolutely no historical link with the Korean Buddhist tradition per se but are late constructs based in large measures on Japanese Shingon Buddhism." [119]

Vietnamese Buddhist esotericism

Statue of Từ Đạo Hạnh wearing an esoteric Five Tathāgatas Crown in the Thầy Temple near Hanoi.

Vietnamese Buddhist esotericism is known as Mật giáo or Mật Tông and is a common part of Vietnamese Mahayana Buddhism (along with Pure Land practice and Thien). [121] Commonly recited esoteric texts include Uṣṇīṣavijayadhāraṇī, the Nīlakaṇṭha Dhāraṇī and the Śūraṅgama mantra. According to Quang Minh Thich "at present, it is still the norm in Vietnamese Buddhist temples, both in Vietnam and abroad, that these mantras, as elements of the Mantrayana, are recited either in their distinctive chanted sessions or in conjunction with other popular Buddhist scriptures. In function, the Vietnamese Tantric practices serve as a complement to the practices of Zen and Pure Land, not as an independent tradition." [121]

The first Vietnamese monk we know of who studied Vajrayana was Master Van Ky (c. 7th century) who received initiation in the kingdom of Srivijaya from a certain Jñānabhadra (Tri Hien) as reported by Yijing.[122] By the 12th century (under the Lý dynasty), esoteric Buddhism was widespread in Vietnam, and was especially favored by the Vô Ngôn Thông school as well as by the Vinitaruci school.[123] One famous esoteric master of this period was Từ Đạo Hạnh.[123] He brought back various texts and practices from Burma. He became famous as a powerful magician.[124] He was fond of the Mahākaraṇika Dhāraṇī.[123] He also spread esoteric teachings throughout Vietnam and liberalized their practice, making them less dependent on reincarnation lineages (similar to Tibetan tulkus).[125] Another promoter of esoteric Buddhism during this period was Sùng Phạm (1004-1078) of Pháp Vân pagoda who studied in India for nine years before returning to Vietnam and was the teacher of the influential esoteric master Tri Bat.[123] Pháp Loa (1284-1330), a leader of the Trúc Lam school, was another very influential Vietnamese esoteric master. He is known for establishing esoteric abhiseka (initiation) ceremonies as well as Huayan (Hoa Nghiêm) assemblies. He also wrote various texts on esoteric topics.[126]

Chinese Buddhist esotericism also influenced Vietnamese esotericism during the medieval period, especially the Huayan Esotericism of Daoshen's Xianmi yuantong chengfo xinyao ji (顯密圓通成佛心要集 Collection of Essentials for the Attainment of Buddhahood by Total [Inter-]Penetration of the Esoteric and the Exoteric, T1955).

Some modern teachers and organizations focus specifically on Vietnamese esoteric Buddhism. Thích Viên Đức (1932-1980) was one important modern promoter of Esoteric Buddhism. He is known for translating a collection of Esoteric Buddhist texts, contributing to the dissemination of Esoteric Buddhism in Vietnam. Thích Viên Đức promoted esoteric Buddhist teachings as the fastest path to enlightenment. He established numerous communities in southern Vietnam and was also known as a healer. He also met with Tibetan lamas and Japanese Buddhists.[127] Another modern Vietnamese esoteric organization is Mat Giao Friendship Association who publishes Phước Triệu's Quintessence of Esoteric Buddhism (2004). Esoteric practices are also currently associated with the Thầy Temple in Greater Hanoi. Vietnamese esotericism can also be quite syncretic, borrowing from Chinese, Japanese and Tibetan Buddhism.

History and overview

Main article: Tibetan Buddhism

Born in the Tantric heartland of Oddiyana (identified as Swat district), Padmasambhava was an important figure in disseminating Buddhism in Tibet

Buddhism was initially established in Tibet in the 8th century when various figures like Padmasambhāva (8th century CE) and Śāntarakṣita (725–788) were invited by King Trisong Detsen, some time before 767. In contrast to its neighbours that adhered to Mahayana, Tibet adopted Vajrayana on full scale following the Samye debate, where Indian Vajrayana scholar Kamalaśīla defeated the Chan Buddhist scholar Moheyan in an Indian style debate. Tibetan Buddhism reflects the later stages tantric Indian Buddhism of the post-Gupta Early Medieval period (500 to 1200 CE).[128][129]

This tradition practices and studies a set of tantric texts and commentaries associated with the more "left hand" (vamachara) tantras, which are not part of East Asian Esoteric Buddhism. These tantras (sometimes termed 'Anuttarayoga tantras' include many transgressive elements, such as sexual and mortuary symbolism that is not shared by the earlier tantras that are studied in East Asian Buddhism. These texts were translated into Classical Tibetan during the "New translation period" (10th–12th centuries). Tibetan Buddhism also includes numerous native Tibetan developments, such as the tulku system, new sadhana texts, Tibetan scholastic works, Dzogchen literature and Terma literature. There are four major traditions or schools: Nyingma, Sakya, Kagyu, and Gelug in addition to minor schools like Jonang and Rimé movement.

In the pre-modern era, Tibetan Buddhism spread outside of Tibet primarily due to the influence of the Mongol Yuan dynasty (1271–1368), founded by Kublai Khan, which ruled China, Mongolia and eastern Siberia. In the modern era it has spread outside of Asia due to the efforts of the Tibetan diaspora (1959 onwards).

The Tibetan Buddhist tradition is today found in Tibet, Bhutan, northern India, Nepal, southwestern and northern China, Mongolia and various constituent republics of Russia that are adjacent to the area, such as Amur Oblast, Buryatia, Zabaykalsky Krai, the Tuva Republic and Khabarovsk Krai. Tibetan Buddhism is also the main religion in Kalmykia. It has also spread to Western countries and there are now international networks of Tibetan Buddhist temples and meditation centers in the Western world from all four schools.

Bengali Buddhism

Bengal was a thriving centre of Vajrayana under the patronage of the Pala dynasty. Many mahasiddhas hailed from the Eastern zone of the Indian subcontinent, with the Charyapada, a collection of songs composed by these mahasiddhas, containing early references to Vajrayana as well as being an early written record of Eastern Indic languages. Bengali Vajrayana scholar Atiśa played a vital role in revitalizing Buddhism in Tibet following its persecution by the Bon emperor Langdarma and onset of the Era of Fragmentation, leading to the foundation of the Kadam lineage. Another Bengali Vajrayana scholar Abhayakaragupta also had a profound impact on Tibetan Buddhism. However Vajrayana declined by the time the Sena dynasty came to power. Vajrayana was further affected by the Islamic conquest of India & consolidation of Muslim rule in Bengal, with many of its adherents converting to Islam under duress & later Gaudiya Vaishnavism, which lead to creation of new groups like Sahajiyas. Today Buddhism in Bengal is followed only by a small minority of Jumma people who are followers of

Theravāda Buddhism.[130]

Nepalese Newar Buddhism

Main article: Newar Buddhism

Newar Buddhism is practiced by Newars in Nepal. It is the only form of Vajrayana Buddhism in which the scriptures are written in Sanskrit and this tradition has preserved many Vajrayana texts in this language. Its priests do not follow celibacy and are called vajracharya (literally "diamond-thunderbolt carriers").

Indonesian Esoteric Buddhism

Main article: Indonesian Esoteric Buddhism

Indonesian Esoteric Buddhism refers to the traditions of Esoteric Buddhism found in the Indonesian islands of Java and Sumatra before the rise and dominance of Islam in the region (13–16th centuries). The Buddhist empire of Srivijaya (650 CE–1377 CE) was a major center of Esoteric Buddhist learning which drew Chinese monks such as Yijing and Indian scholars like Atiśa.[131] The temple complex at Borobudur in central Java, built by the Shailendra dynasty also reflects strong Tantric or at least proto-tantric influences, particularly of the cult of Vairocana.[132][133]

Indonesian Esoteric Buddhism may have also reached the Philippines, possibly establishing the first form of Buddhism in the Philippines. The few Buddhist artifacts that have been found in the islands reflect the iconography of Srivijaya's Vajrayana.[134]

Related traditions

Some traditions are related to Vajrayana, but are not to be seen as "Vajrayana" or "Mantrayana" proper. Vajrayana here referring to the Buddhist tradition based on the tantric literature of North Indian Mahayana, the Buddhist tantras and the works of the Nalanda - Vikramashila masters and the Buddhist mahasiddhas. However, these related traditions may have been influenced by Vajrayana proper and have borrowed practices from Vajrayana schools.

Shugendō

Main article: Shugendō

Shugendō was founded in 7th-century Japan by the ascetic En no Gyōja, based on the Queen's Peacocks Sutra. With its origins in the solitary hijiri back in the 7th century, Shugendō evolved as a sort of amalgamation between Esoteric Buddhism, Shinto and several other religious influences including Taoism. Buddhism and Shinto were amalgamated in the shinbutsu shūgō, and Kūkai's syncretic religion held wide sway up until the end of the Edo period, coexisting with Shinto elements within Shugendō[135]

In 1613 during the Edo period, the Tokugawa Shogunate issued a regulation obliging Shugendō temples to belong to either Shingon or Tendai temples. During the Meiji Restoration, when Shinto was declared an independent state religion separate from Buddhism, Shugendō was banned as a superstition not fit for a new, enlightened Japan. Some Shugendō temples converted themselves into various officially approved Shintō denominations. In modern times, Shugendō is practiced mainly by Tendai and Shingon sects, retaining an influence on modern Japanese religion and culture.[136]

Southern Esoteric Buddhism

Main article: Southern Esoteric Buddhism

Abhayagiri vihara was a thriving centre of esoteric Buddhism in Sri Lanka until its suppression by Parakramabahu I.

"Southern Esoteric Buddhism" or Borān kammaṭṭhāna ('ancient practices') is a term for esoteric forms of Buddhism from Southeast Asia, where Theravada Buddhism is dominant. The monks of the Sri Lankan, Abhayagiri vihara once practiced forms of tantra which were popular in the island.[137] Another tradition of this type was Ari Buddhism, which was common in Burma. The Tantric Buddhist 'Yogāvacara' tradition was a major Buddhist tradition in Cambodia, Laos and Thailand well into the modern era.[138]

Southern Esoteric Buddhism is a unique Southeast Asian development based on Theravada Abhidhamma and Pali language sources. As such, it has no direct connection to the Indian "Vajrayana" of the Buddhist tantras, the Indian mahasiddhas and the Nalanda-Vikramashila traditions.

Southern Esoteric Buddhism declined after the rise of Southeast Asian Buddhist modernism. However, esoteric Buddhist practices remain in some contemporary South East Asian traditions, including the Thai Dhammakaya tradition, the Burmese Weizza tradition and in rural Cambodian Buddhism.

Academic study difficulties

Serious Vajrayana academic study in the Western world is in early stages due to the following obstacles:[139]

Although a large number of Tantric scriptures are extant, they have not been formally ordered or systematized.

Due to the esoteric initiatory nature of the tradition, many practitioners will not divulge information or sources of their information.

As with many different subjects, it must be studied in context and with a long history spanning many different cultures.

Ritual, as well as doctrine, need to be investigated.

Buddhist tantric practice is categorized as secret practice; this is to avoid misinformed people from harmfully misusing the practices. A method to keep this secrecy is that tantric initiation is required from a master before any instructions can be received about the actual practice. During the initiation procedure in the highest class of tantra (such as the Kalachakra), students must take the tantric vows which commit them to such secrecy.[140] "Explaining general tantra theory in a scholarly manner, not sufficient for practice, is likewise not a root downfall. Nevertheless, it weakens the effectiveness of our tantric practice." [141]

Terminology

The terminology associated with Vajrayana Buddhism can be confusing. Most of the terms originated in the Sanskrit language of tantric Indian Buddhism and may have passed through other cultures, notably those of Japan and Tibet, before translation for the modern reader. Further complications arise as seemingly equivalent terms can have subtle variations in use and meaning according to context, the time and place of use. A third problem is that Vajrayana texts employ the tantric tradition of twilight language, a means of instruction that is deliberately coded. These obscure teaching methods relying on symbolism as well as synonym, metaphor and word association add to the difficulties faced by those attempting to understand Vajrayana Buddhism:

In the Vajrayana tradition, now preserved mainly in Tibetan lineages, it has long been recognized that certain important teachings are expressed in a form of secret symbolic language known as saṃdhyā-bhāṣā, 'Twilight Language'. Mudrās and mantras, maṇḍalas and cakras, those mysterious devices and diagrams that were so much in vogue in the pseudo-Buddhist hippie culture of the 1960s, were all examples of Twilight Language [...][142]

The term Tantric Buddhism was not one originally used by those who practiced it. As scholar Isabelle Onians explains:

"Tantric Buddhism" [...] is not the transcription of a native term, but a rather modern coinage, if not totally occidental. For the equivalent Sanskrit tāntrika is found, but not in Buddhist texts. Tāntrika is a term denoting someone who follows the teachings of scriptures known as Tantras, but only in Saivism, not Buddhism [...] Tantric Buddhism is a name for a phenomenon which calls itself, in Sanskrit, Mantranaya, Vajrayāna, Mantrayāna or Mantramahāyāna (and apparently never Tantrayāna). Its practitioners are known as mantrins, yogis, or sādhakas. Thus, our use of the anglicised adjective "Tantric" for the Buddhist religion taught in Tantras is not native to the tradition, but is a borrowed term which serves its purpose.[143]

vte

In various occultist movements, Secret Chiefs are said to be transcendent cosmic authorities, a spiritual hierarchy responsible for the operation and moral calibre of the cosmos, or for overseeing the operations of an esoteric organization that manifests outwardly in the form of a magical order or lodge system. Their names and descriptions have varied through time, differing among those who have claimed experience of contact with them. They are variously held to exist on higher planes of being or to be incarnate; if incarnate, they may be described as being gathered at some special location, such as Shambhala, or scattered through the world working anonymously.

History

One early and influential source on these entities is Karl von Eckartshausen, whose The Cloud upon the Sanctuary,<sup>[1]</sup> published in 1793, explained in some detail their character and motivations.<sup>[2]</sup> Several 19th and 20th century occultists claimed to belong to or to have contacted these Secret Chiefs and made these communications known to others: Aleister Crowley (who used the term to refer to members of the upper three grades of his order, A.∴A.∴),<sup>[3]</sup> Dion Fortune (who called them the "esoteric order"),<sup>[4]</sup> and Max Heindel (who called them the "Elder Brothers").<sup>[5]</sup>

Golden Dawn

Main article: Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn

The Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn was founded by persons claiming to be in communication with the Secret Chiefs. One of these Secret Chiefs (or a person in contact with them) was supposedly the (probably fictional) Anna Sprengel, whose name and address were allegedly decoded from the Cipher Manuscripts by William Wynn Westcott.<sup>[6]</sup>

In 1892, S. MacGregor Mathers (another founder) claimed that he had contacted these Secret Chiefs independently of Sprengel, and that this confirmed his position as head of the Golden Dawn.<sup>[7]</sup> He declared this in a manifesto four years later saying that they were human and living on Earth, yet possessed terrible superhuman powers.<sup>[7]</sup> He used this status to found the Second Order within the Golden Dawn,<sup>[8]</sup> and to introduce the Adeptus Minor ritual.<sup>[9]</sup>

Aleister Crowley

Main article: Aleister Crowley

While in Algeria in 1909, Aleister Crowley, along with Victor Neuburg, recited numerous Enochian Calls or Aires. After the fifteenth Aire, he declared that he had attained the grade of Magister Templi (Master of the Temple), which meant that he was now on the level of these Secret Chiefs, although this declaration caused many occultists to stop taking him seriously if they had not done so already.[10][11] He also described this attainment as a possible and in fact a necessary step for all who truly followed his path.

Notes

Crowley (1935), in his One Star in Sight, says the order in question "is composed of those who have crossed the Abyss...the two crises — the Angel and the Abyss — are necessary features in every career."

Sri Yantra – Symbolism and Meaning • 108 Yoga Retreats

A yantra is a sacred geometric diagram from Tantric traditions (Hinduism, Buddhism) used as a tool for meditation, worship, and spiritual focus, representing cosmic or divine energies through symbols like triangles, circles, and lotuses, functioning as a spiritual machine or map to achieve goals like prosperity, protection, or higher consciousness, and can also refer to alchemical devices in Ayurveda or postmodern design objects.

Key Aspects of Yantras:

Purpose: Aids meditation, worship (deities), focus, manifesting desires, healing, and spiritual attainment by amplifying energy.

Structure: Composed of geometric shapes (triangles, circles, squares, lotus petals) and often inscribed with mantras (sacred syllables).

Symbolism: Represents the cosmos, divine union (Shiva-Shakti), specific deities, or abstract concepts like creation and life force.

Examples:

Sri Yantra: A complex, powerful yantra symbolizing the cosmos and divine feminine energy.

Hanuman Yantra: For strength and overcoming obstacles.

Lakshmi Yantra: For wealth.

Types: Can be physical (drawn, engraved, tattooed) or energetic, serving as "spiritual machines" to enhance life or specific actions.

Origin: Ancient, with roots in the Indus Valley Civilization (Mohenjadaro, Harappa), integral to Tantric practices.

How They're Used:

Focus: Sit comfortably facing the yantra, focusing on its center.

Meditation: Stare at the geometry, then close your eyes and visualize it, feeling its energy.

Placement: Often placed in the North or East for positive energy.

In essence, a yantra is a visual mantra, a sacred instrument designed to connect the practitioner with specific divine energies or cosmic principles, as explained by Isha Foundation.

Feminine goddess form

“Without chakra alignment and purification, the Śrī Yantra cannot activate. Beloved, Understand this truth: The Śrī Yantra is not awakened by worship... it is awakened by energetic purity. This sacred geometry cannot anchor inside a field that is fragmented, wounded, or blocked. It requires a vessel that has been cleared, emptied, purified, and aligned. **If the chakras are not aligned... the yantra remains dormant. Because the Śrī Yantra is pure order, and it cannot live inside inner chaos. ROOT If the root is not healed... There is no safety, no grounding, no stabilizing force. Without foundation, the yantra has nothing to sit upon. It collapses. HEART If the heart is not open... The tantra cannot flow. Shakti cannot circulate. The geometry cannot breathe. CROWN If the crown is blocked... Mantra cannot descend. Guidance cannot be heard. Divine intelligence cannot activate the upper triangles. **Only when the Root is grounded... The Heart is purified... The Crown is open... d

YANTRAS: REMEDIES FOR PEACE AND PROSPERITY

Yantra is a geometrical diagram, mainly from the Tantric traditions of the Indian religions. Yantras are used for the worship of deities in temples or at home; as an aid in meditation; and for the benefits believed given by their occult powers based on Hindu astrology and tantric texts.

Specific Mudras Play a Powerful Role in Spiritual Practices Specific mudras are not just hand gestures they are sacred keys that activate energy pathways and deepen spiritual awareness . When practiced correctly, mudras balance the chakras, regulate pranic flow, and amplify meditation and Kundalini awakening . Each mudra carries a unique vibration that aligns the mind, body, and soul into higher consciousness . Under proper guidance, mudras become powerful tools for healing, focus, and inner transformation . This is why ancient yogic wisdom emphasizes precision, intention, and purity in every spiritual practice . . . . . #MudraPower #SpiritualPractices #KundaliniAwakening #PranicEnergy #ChakraActivation #HigherConsciousness #SacredGestures #EnergyAlignment #MeditationTools #YogicWisdom #InnerTransformation #AwakenYourSoul #SpiritualDiscipline #DivineFlow #SoulAlignment

Mudras are hand gestures during meditation that channel your body's energy flow. For those of you that struggle with meditation, this practice is a good gateway into more formal meditation. You sit relatively still and allow our mind to slow, but you can keep your mind somewhat active as your focus on the hand gestures. If you already have a regular meditation practice, you may already be using a mudra and not realize it. For instance, if you meditate by sitting in a cross legged position with your thumb and index finger connected so they form a zero and your other fingers extended and your hands placed palms-up on your thighs, then you are performing a classic Chin Mudra. This mudra focuses on your breathing. By sitting and holding your hands in this way you are activating your diaphragm and creating a healthy flow of oxygen in and out of your body. Just make mudras part of meditation. Some mudras are simple enough so that you can even do them with your hands in your pockets. Yo

Our hands are more than tools; they are extensions of the heart, mind, and spirit. In yoga and meditation, mudras serve as energetic seals, guiding the flow of prana (life force) and inviting balance from within. Each gesture becomes a quiet conversation with the soul—one that awakens stillness, clarity, and connection to higher intention. Practicing a mudra is not just about form, but about presence. When you pause, breathe, and let your hands express awareness, you begin to harmonize body, mind, and spirit in subtle yet profound ways. AI Overview

African and Afro-Caribbean spiritual systems are rich syncretic traditions that combine West African indigenous beliefs with elements of Roman Catholicism, developed among descendants of enslaved Africans in the Americas. Key examples include Vodou, Santería, and Ifá, which are practiced in various parts of the world today.

Overview of Key Systems

Vodou (Haitian, Dominican, New Orleans) Originating primarily from the Fon and Ewe peoples of West Africa, Vodou centers on the worship and interaction with a pantheon of spirits known as the lwa. Rituals often involve drumming, dancing, spirit possession, and offerings, with a historical significance in movements like the Haitian Revolution.

Santería (also known as La Regla de Ocha or Lukumí) Developed in Cuba, Santería blends the Yoruba religion's Orisha worship with Roman Catholic iconography.

Practitioners (who are often also Catholic) use Catholic saints to represent the African deities, a practice of spiritual survival under colonial oppression. The system relies on intricate divination methods and includes the veneration of the Seven African Powers (major Orishas like Eshu Elegbara, Ogun, Obatala, Yemaya, Oshun, Shango, and Oya).

Ifá This is a complete religious and philosophical system of divination rooted in the Yoruba land of West Africa (modern-day Nigeria). Ifá uses a corpus of sacred texts called the Odu Ifá and a complex system of divination using tools like the Opele chain or Ikin nuts. Ifá is the foundation for many Afro-Caribbean traditions and focuses on aligning an individual with their destiny (ori).

Candomblé Found predominantly in Brazil, Candomblé is another major Afro-Diasporic religion centered on the Orishas, adapting the original African practices to American soil.

Common Features

Syncretism All these traditions show a blending of African and European Catholic beliefs and symbols due to the need to practice their faith in secret during slavery.

Spirit Veneration A core belief is the communication with and veneration of spirits (lwa or Orishas) and ancestors who act as intermediaries with a supreme creator god (e.g., Olodumare).

Oral Tradition and Divination Knowledge is passed down through extensive oral traditions, and elaborate divination systems are used to communicate with the spirits and seek guidance for life.

Community and Ritual These are living traditions typically practiced in private communities and homes, involving music (like Bata drums in Santería), dance, and offerings.

These systems represent a profound cultural and spiritual survival, resilience, and adaptation in the face of immense historical adversity.

From the Benefits of Dhikr - Islam TeesIslam Tees

Dhikr (or Zikr) is a fundamental Islamic practice of remembering, glorifying, and praising Allah through the repeated recitation of specific prayers, phrases (like SubhanAllah, Alhamdulillah, Allahu Akbar), or verses from the Quran, often done with intention, focus, and sometimes prescribed movements or breath, central to both general worship and Sufi mysticism for spiritual closeness to God.

Key Aspects of Dhikr:

Meaning: From the Arabic word dhakara, meaning "to remember," "to mention," or "to recite".

Purpose: To keep God constantly in one's mind, glorify Him, seek spiritual perfection, and feel His presence.

Forms: Can be silent or aloud, solitary or communal, using short phrases or longer supplications, often counted on fingers or prayer beads (tasbeeh).

Quranic Basis: Commands from the Quran encourage frequent remembrance, such as "Remember Allah with much remembrance" (33:41).

Sufi Practice: A core spiritual discipline in Sufism (Islamic mysticism) to achieve spiritual states, with specific orders having unique dhikr practices.

Examples of Dhikr Phrases:

La ilaha illa Allah (There is no god but God)

Allahu Akbar (God is greatest)

Alhamdulillah (Praise be to God)

SubhanAllah (Glory be to God)

Astaghfirullah (I seek God's forgiveness)

How it's Performed:

Mindfulness: Focusing on the meaning, not just the words, and feeling God's presence.

Consistency: Doing it regularly, even in small amounts.

Etiquette: Can involve a calm setting, reflection, and using the right hand for counting.

The Dhikr, Eugène Baugnies (1841–1891)

Dhikr (Arabic: ذِكْر;[a] Arabic pronunciation: [ðikr]; lit. 'remembrance, reminder,[4] mention[5]') is a form of Islamic worship in which phrases or prayers are repeatedly recited for the purpose of remembering God.[4][6] It plays a central role in Sufism,[7] and each Sufi order typically adopts a specific dhikr, accompanied by specific posture, breathing, and movement.[8] In Sufism, dhikr refers to both the act of this remembrance as well as the prayers used in these acts of remembrance.[4] Dhikr usually includes the names of God or supplication from the Quran or hadith. It may be counted with either one's fingers or prayer beads,[4] and may be performed alone or with a collective group. [8] A person who recites dhikr is called a dhākir (ذَاكِر; [ða:kɪr]; lit. 'rememberer').[5]

The Quran frequently refers to itself and other scriptures and prophetic messages as "reminders" (dhikrah, tadhkīrah), which is understood as a call to "remember" (dhikr) an innate knowledge of God humans already possess. The Quran uses the term dhikr to denote the reminder from God conveyed through the prophets and messengers, as well as the human response to that reminder, signifying a reciprocal interaction between the divine and human. Muslims believe the prophets deliver God's message as a reminder to humans, who, in turn, should remember and acknowledge it.[9]

Importance

Several verses in the Quran emphasize the importance of remembering the will of God by saying phrases such as "God willing" "God knows best," and "If it is your will." This is the basis for dhikr. Surah al-Kahf (18), Ayah 24 states a person who forgets to say, "God willing", should immediately remember God by saying, "Maybe my Lord will guide me to [something] more akin to rectitude than this." [10] Other verses include Surah al-Ahzab (33), Ayah 41, "O you who have faith! Remember Allah with frequent remembrance", [11] and Surah ar-Ra'd (13), Ayah 28, "those who have faith, and whose hearts find rest in the remembrance of Allah. Look! The hearts find rest in Allah's remembrance!" [12]

Sufi dhikr most commonly involves the repetition of the Names of Allah. This practice is central to Sufi spiritual exercises and is intended to foster a deeper connection with the Divine. The Names of Allah, also known as Asma'ul Husna, represent various attributes of God, such as "Ar-Rahman" (The Most Merciful) and "Al-Karim" (The Generous). By invoking these names, practitioners aim to internalize the qualities they represent, cultivate a state of spiritual purity, and draw closer to God. The repetitive nature of dhikr helps to quiet the mind, focus the heart, and create a sense of inner peace and presence. To Sufis, dhikr is seen as a way to gain spiritual enlightenment and achieve annihilation of self (fana) to seek permanence in God. [13] All Muslim sects endorse individual rosaries as a method dhikr and meditation, the goal of which is to obtain a feeling of peace, separation from worldly values (dunya), and, in general, strengthen Iman (faith). The main purpose of dhikr is to fill the heart with spiritual meaning and not simply chant the invocations with an empty heart and absent mind. When performed with awareness, the heart then becomes receptive to the activity of the tongue and is aware of God's presence. [14]

Recitation of Quran

Reciting the Quran sincerely is also considered a kind of Dhikr. For example:

Reciting Surah al-Ikhlās (112) is equal to one-third of the Quran.[23]

Reciting Surah al-Ikhlās (112) 10 times gives a palace in Heaven, and 20 times grants two palaces.[24]

Reciting Surah al-Kāfirūn (109) is equal to one-fourth of the Quran.[25]

Reciting Surah an-Nasr (110) is equal to one-fourth of the Quran.[26][27]

Reciting Surah az-Zalzalah (99) is equal to half of the Quran.[27][26]

Tasbih of Fatimah

The Islamic prophet Muhammad is reported to have taught his daughter Fatimah bint Rasul Allah a special manner of Dhikr which is known as the "Tasbih of Fatimah".[36] This consists of:

33 repetitions of subḥāna -llahi (سُبْحَانَ اللَّهِ), meaning "Glorified is God". This saying is known as Tasbih (تَسْبِيح).

33 repetitions of al-ḥamdu lillāhi (الْحَمْدُ لِلَّهِ), meaning "All Praise belongs to God". This saying is known as Tahmid (تَحْمِيد).

34 repetitions of 'allāhu 'akbaru (اللَّهُ أَكْبَرُ), meaning "God is Greater [than everything]". This saying is known as Takbir (تَكْبِير).

The Shia way of doing the Tasbih of Fatimah[36] is:

34 repetitions of 'allāhu 'akbaru (اللَّهُ أَكْبَرُ), meaning "God is Greater [than everything]". This saying is known as Takbir (تَكْبِير).

33 repetitions of al-ḥamdu lillāhi (الْحَمْدُ لِلَّهِ), meaning "All Praise belongs to God". This saying is known as Tahmid (تَحْمِيد).

33 repetitions of subḥāna -llahi (سُبْحَانَ اللَّهِ), meaning "Glorified is God". This saying is known as Tasbih (تَسْبِيح).

Saying one time at the end: La ilaha il Allah (There is no god but Allah).

Prayer beads

An example of a Tasbih that Muslims use to track their count for dhikr.

Like many other religions, the use of rosaries is also recommended when remembering God. Since it can get difficult to keep track of the counting of the prayers, the beads are used to keep track so that the person reciting the prayer can turn all of their focus on what is actually being said - as it can become difficult to concentrate simultaneously on the number and phrasing when one is doing so a substantial number of times.[37]

Similarly, as dhikr involves the repetition of particular phrases a specific number of times, prayer beads are used to keep track of the count.

Known also as Tasbih, these are usually Misbaha (prayer beads) upon a string, 33, 99, or 100 in number, which correspond to the names of God in Islam and other recitations. The beads are used to keep track of the number of recitations that make up the dhikr.[4] [38]

In the United States, Muslim inmates are allowed to utilize prayer beads for therapeutic effects.[39] In Alameen v. Coughlin, 892 F. Supp. 440 (E.D.N.Y 1995), Imam Hamzah S. Alameen, a/k/a Gilbert Henry, and Robert Golden brought suit against Thomas A. Coughlin III, etc., et alia (Head of the Department of Corrections) in the State of New York pursuant to 42 USC Section 1983.[40] The plaintiffs argued that prisoners have a First Amendment Constitutional right to pursue Islamic healing therapy called KASM (قاسمة | qaasama | taking an oath ) which uses prayer beads. The rosary of oaths, which Alameen developed, was used to successfully rehabilitate inmates suffering from co-occurring mental health challenges and substance abuse issues during the 1990s. All people, including Muslims and Catholics, were allowed to use prayer beads inside prisons, lest their freedom of religion be violated when the prison administration forbade their possession as contraband in the penal system.

Dhakhir

A group of Iranian Maddahs/Dhakirs, in a gathering

A "dhakir" (دَاكِر) or "Zaker" (literally "mentioner" a speaker who refers to something briefly/incidentally),[41][42] or reminder,[43] is considered a maddah who reminds the remembering of Allah (and His Dhikr) for people, and he himself should also be reciter of dhikr; namely, not only he ought to be a recital of Dhikr, but also he should put the audience in the situation of dhikr reminding (of Allah and likewise Ahl al-Bayt).[44]

Idiomatically, the term means "praiser of God" or "professional narrator of the tragedies of Karbala (and Ahl al-Bayt)". To some extent, it can mean Maddah/panegyrist too.[45] [46]

The root of the word "Dhakir" (دَاكِر) is "Dhikr" (ذِكْر) which means remembering/praising; and the word "Dhakiri" (ذَاكِرِيّ) is the act which is done by Dhakir, i.e. mentioning the Dhikr (of Allah, the Ahl al-Bayt, etc.) by observing its specific principles/manners.[47][48][49]

Sufi practice

Followers of Sufism have two main ways of engaging in dhikr: silent and vocal dhikr. Silent dhikr has been considered by many Sufi practitioners to be the best form of dhikr, where dhikr is done silently and in one position without moving the body.[50] This method of dhikr allowed it to be done whenever one could, and it avoided showing off as it was privately done. Among the biggest advocates for silent dhikr was Baha' al-Dīn Naqshband, and his form of dhikr "...required the practitioners to force internal energy into different parts within the body through concentrating the mind and regulating the breath. This was to be undertaken while repeating the verbal formula that constitutes the Islamic profession of faith: 'there is no god but God, and Muhammad is the messenger of God'".[50] Each word in the verbal statement was for a specific part of the body, such as the navel or the upper chest.

The other form of Sufi dhikr is vocal dhikr performed using the tongue and body, where showing off is not considered a primary concern. This dhikr could be done privately or within a group, and like the Naqshband dhikr, it emphasized having the verbal invocations ripple throughout the body.[50] Similar to the Naqshband practice of dhikr, where specific words were for specific locations of the body, exists the 'four-beat' (chahar iarb) dhikr that is attributed the Kubravī master 'Alī Hamadani.

Sufis often engage in ritualized dhikr ceremonies that have stemmed from these two types of dhikr, the details of which vary between Sufi orders or tariqah.[51] An example of this is the initiation of an applicant, where the repetition of dhikr is a necessary component in the ceremony.[51] Each order, or lineage within an order, has one or more forms for group dhikr, the liturgy of which may include recitation, singing, music, dance, costumes, incense, muraqaba (meditation), ecstasy, and trance.[52] Common terms for the forms of litany employed include "hizb" (pl. "ahzab"), "wird" (pl. "awrad") and durood. An example of a popular work of litany is Dala'il al-Khayrat. Another type of group dhikr ceremony that is most commonly performed in Arab countries is called the ḥaḍra (lit. presence).[53] A ḥaḍra can draw upon secular Arab genres and typically last for hours.[54] Finally, sama` (lit. audition) is a type of group ceremony that consists mostly of recited spiritual poetry and Quranic recitation.[55]

Revelations and prophetic messages

According to William Chittick, "The Koran commonly refers to the knowledge brought by the prophets as "remembrance" (dhikr) and "reminder" (dhikra, tadhkir), terms that derive from the root dh-k-r".[9] These terms appear more than forty times in the Quran to describe the Quran itself.[9] For example, the Quran refers to itself as "The Wise Reminder" (al-dhikr al-ḥakīm) in 3:58,[56] "a Reminder for the believers" (dhikra Lil mu'minin) in 7:2,[57] and "The reminder for the worlds" (dhikra Lil 'alamin) in 6:90.[58]

The prophet Muhammad himself is described in 88:21 as a "reminder" ("So remind! thou art but a reminder").[59] The same terms are also used to refer to other prophetic messages such as the Torah and the Gospel.[9] In that vein, the Jews and the Christians are thus referred to as "the people of the Reminder" (ahl al dhikr) (16:43, 21:7).[60] The Quran justifies the sending of numerous prophets by God by stating that human beings, similar to their forefather Adam, have a propensity to forget and become heedless. The key to confronting this shortcoming is the remembrance that God conveys through his prophets.[9] According to Islamic beliefs, prophets have the function of reminding (dhikr) people of what they already know, while humans only need to remember (dhikr) their innate knowledge of God. This knowledge is said to be present in the divine spirit that God breathed into Adam, as the Quran states that God molded Adam's clay with His own hands and blew into him His own spirit (32:9, 15:29, 38:72). [61][62]

[The message of Islam] is a call for recollection, for the remembrance of a knowledge kneaded into the very substance of our being even before our coming into this world. In a famous verse that defines the relationship between human beings and God, the Quran, in referring to the pre-cosmic existence of man, states, "Am I not your Lord?" They said: "Yes, we bear witness" (7:172). The "they" refers to all the children of Adam, male and female, and the "yes" confirms the affirmation of God's Oneness by us in our pre-eternal ontological reality. Men and women still bear the echo of this "yes" deep down within their souls, and the call of Islam is precisely to this primordial nature, which uttered the "yes" even before the creation of the heavens and the earth. The call of Islam, therefore, concerns, above all, the remembrance of a knowledge deeply embedded in our being, the confirmation of a knowledge that saves, hence the soteriological function of knowledge in Islam.[63]

—William Chittick, The Essential Seyyed Hossein Nasr, 2007

The Quran also highlights that God called upon all souls to witness His lordship, so that no one can plead ignorance on the Day of Judgment: "Lest you say on the Day of Resurrection, "As for us, we were heedless of this," or lest you say, "Our fathers associated others with God before us, and we were their offspring after them. What, wilt Thou destroy us for what the vain-doers did?" (7:172-73).[64]

The Quran uses the term "dhikr" to refer to both the reminder that comes from God through the prophets and the response of humans to that reminder. This word reflects a two-way communication process between the Divine and the human. The prophets deliver the message of God, which is intended to serve as a reminder to humans, and humans respond to it by remembering and acknowledging it.[65] In addition, the Quran clarifies that "dhikr" as the human response to God's reminder is not limited to merely acknowledging the truth of tawhid (the oneness of God). Rather, the term "dhikr" also means "to mention." Thus, on the human side, "dhikr" involves not only being aware of God's presence but also expressing that awareness through language, whether spoken or unspoken. Therefore, "dhikr" encompasses both the inner state of being mindful of God and the outer expression of that mindfulness through verbal or nonverbal means.

In earlier orders, the "presence" referred to was that of God, but since the 18th century it has been considered to be the spiritual presence of Muhammad (John L. Esposito, "Hadrâh." The Oxford Dictionary of Islam. Oxford Islamic Studies Online. Web. 3 Apr. 2010.) The shifting focus, however, is not shared by all and is a result of the Sufi reforms, which sought to mitigate the heretical belief of theopanism committed by some Sufi claimants through a greater focus on the spirit and active life of Muhammad instead of a metaphorical union with God.(Ira Lapidus, A History of Islamic Societies, p. 210)

AI Overview

The Secret of the Golden Flower (Chinese Alchemy) --- Hui ...

The Secret of the Golden Flower (SGF) is a key Taoist alchemy text, a meditation manual on inner alchemy for spiritual enlightenment, focusing on cultivating the inner "golden flower" (spiritual essence) by "turning the light around" to unite Yin and Yang energies, influencing both Eastern spiritual traditions and Western psychology (Jung). It details practices like breathwork and meditation to transform consciousness, achieving immortality or spiritual rebirth, and is known for its rich symbolism, combining Buddhist, Confucian, and Taoist ideas.

Key Concepts & Teachings

Inner Alchemy (Neidan): Focuses on refining one's own spirit (Shen) and energy (Qi) rather than external substances.

The Golden Flower: Symbolizes the radiant spiritual essence, the union of primal Yin and Yang energies within.

Turning the Light Around (Hui Guang Fan Zhao): The core practice of focusing consciousness inward, directing the "light" (awareness) from the external world back to its source in the heart/mind.

Yin & Yang: Emphasizes balancing these opposing forces (passive/receptive and active/dynamic) for vitality and spiritual growth.

Qi, Shen, Dantian: Uses core Taoist terms for vital energy (Qi), spirit (Shen), and energy center (Dantian).

Influence & Significance

Western Impact: Gained prominence in the West through Richard Wilhelm's translation (1929) and Carl Jung's commentary, deeply influencing Jung's work on the unconscious and synchronicity.

Holistic Well-being: Offers methods (meditation, breathwork) for stress reduction, mental clarity, and emotional resilience, bridging spirituality and health.

Textual Nuances: Later translations (like Filbert's) have provided more accurate versions, including missing chapters and better preservation of classical terminology.

Core Practices (Simplified)

Establish Activity: Ground oneself in daily life before deep meditation.

Turn the Light: Focus inward for set periods (e.g., 100 days), directing awareness to the heart.

Circulate Light: Use breathwork to gather energy (Qi) in the dantian, allowing it to circulate and nourish the spiritual embryo.

Congel & Crystallize: Achieve a state where Yin and Yang energies merge into "pure energy" or "pure thought," leading to spiritual rebirth.

Manuscript fragments of the Merlin legend now published ...

"The Red Serpent (Manuscript fragments)" likely refers to fictional elements in books or games, such as the "Serpent Papers" in Jessica Cornwell's novel involving alchemical secrets, or fragments found in the game Genshin Impact during the Enkanomiya quest "The Trail of Drake and Doubters" (part of the "Before the Sun's Return" storyline), often featuring illuminated serpents in real medieval documents that inspire such tales.

In Gaming (Genshin Impact):

"The Trail of Drake and Doubters": Players collect three fragments in Enkanomiya by solving puzzles and fighting enemies (wolves, Pyro Lectors) to give to an NPC named Ru, uncovering lore.

In Literature (Fictional):

"The Serpent Papers" by Jessica Cornwell: A novel featuring a palimpsest (reused parchment) called the "Serpent Papers," containing clues from alchemical texts related to medieval philosophy (Ramon Llull) and esoteric verse, central to a murder mystery.

In Real-World History/Art (Inspiration):

Illuminated Manuscripts: Medieval charters, like one from 1402 at Trinity College Dublin, sometimes feature letters (like 'S') illuminated as red serpents or dragons, inspiring fictional "red serpent" motifs in media.

So, depending on where you encountered the term, it's either a quest item, a plot device in a thriller, or a reference to historical manuscript art.

Get to Know the Green Dragons of Dungeons & Dragons' New Era ...

"The Green Dragon" (Le Dragon Vert) refers to various mythical creatures, artworks, and game elements, symbolizing nature, poison, cunning, or life, appearing in Dungeons & Dragons (forest-dwelling, poisonous), Magic: The Gathering (creatures with poison effects), Dragon City (a Legendary Nature/Wind dragon), and even Salvador Dalí's art as "Le Dragon Vert". They're often associated with forests, swamps, and trickery, embodying nature's power and danger.

In Fantasy & Games

Dungeons & Dragons (D&D): A classic chromatic dragon type living in forests, known for cunning and poisonous breath, often found in mist-shrouded woods.

Magic: The Gathering (MTG): A cycle of dragons, including the Green Dragon, tied to the Dungeons & Dragons universe, often featuring poison or destruction mechanics.

Dragon City: A legendary dragon combining Nature, Wind, and Terra elements, unlocking skins as it levels up.

Lost Kingdoms: A wingless, green-skinned dragon with distinctive features like small horns and missing eyes.

In Art & Culture

Salvador Dalí: "Le Dragon Vert" is a limited edition etching and aquatint print by the surrealist artist.

Symbolism: Green dragons often represent nature, spring, rebirth, and life (like the Chinese Green Dragon of the East), but also poison and deception in Western lore.

Other Meanings

CBD Products: "Green Dragon CBD" suggests a wellness product for stress and pain relief, utilizing CBD.

Fairy Tales: "Le Serpentin Vert" (The Green Serpent/Dragon) is a French fairy tale.

AI Overview

"Le Dragon Vert" (The Green Dragon) refers to several things, including a classic French fairy tale ("Le Serpentin Vert"), an art piece by Salvador Dalí, various books by authors like Jacques Goldstyn, a comic book character (Sarah Spits), and even a fantasy tavern in Lord of the Rings lore, generally representing a mythical green dragon in French or fantasy contexts, often a transformed prince or a powerful magical being.

Here's a breakdown of common meanings:

Fairy Tale: In Marie-Catherine d'Aulnoy's 1698 tale, Le Serpentin Vert, the Green Dragon is a handsome king under a spell, with green wings and fiery eyes, similar to Eros and Psyche.

Art: Salvador Dalí created a limited-edition etching and aquatint print titled Le Dragon Vert.

Books: Jacques Goldstyn wrote a children's book called Le Dragon Vert, and there's a French edition of a book by Oscar Goldstein.

Comics: Marc Wasterlain wrote and illustrated a story called Le dragon vert within the Sarah Spits comic series.

Fantasy: In The Lord of the Rings fandom (Fandom Wiki), "Dragon Vert" can refer to the Green Dragon Inn in the fictional town of Bree.

Essentially, it's a popular French phrase for a green dragon, appearing across different media and stories.

Grimorium Verum

Book

The Grimorium Verum is an 18th-century grimoire attributed to one "Alibeck the Egyptian" of Memphis, who purportedly wrote it in 1517. Like many grimoires, it claims a tradition originating with King Solomon.

AI Overview

"Bio-regenesis" is a concept within New Age spiritual and pseudoscientific contexts, often associated with the Kathara Healing System or "MCEO Freedom Teachings". It is not recognized or validated by contemporary mainstream science.

Overview of Bio-Regenesis and the Kathara Grid

Bio-Regenesis Technologies: These are described as tools and techniques designed to accelerate consciousness expansion by stimulating dormant aspects of an individual's personal energy systems, including the DNA template, chakras, Kundalini energies, and the Merkaba vehicle. The premise is that these methods work with scalar wave mechanics and a "manifestation template" of the body.

Kathara Healing System: This system is presented as a bio-spiritual healing modality that utilizes the "Kathara Grid," which practitioners also refer to as the "Tree of Life" or the "Krystal Spiral". This grid is described as a morphogenetic and holographic blueprint for all creation.

Purpose: Proponents suggest that bio-regenesis techniques, utilizing the Kathara system, can help "prepare humans for star gate passage or ascension" by allowing the higher spiritual identity to integrate with the earthly identity.

These concepts are primarily explored as options for meditation and spiritual practice within specific alternative belief systems, rather than as empirically verified scientific or medical practices.

AI Overview

Hindu Tantra is a complex spiritual path focused on using rituals, mantras, meditation, and yogic practices to awaken divine energy (Shakti) within, aiming for spiritual liberation (mukti) and worldly enjoyment (bhukti) by integrating the material and spiritual realms, often centered on deities like Shiva and the Great Goddess. It's a system for spiritual transformation that emphasizes direct experience and uses tools like sacred sounds (mantras) and diagrams (yantras) to achieve union with the divine.

Core Concepts

Shakti: The dynamic, creative, divine feminine energy, seen as the source of the universe, often worshipped as the supreme Goddess (Devi).

Shiva: The static, unmanifested aspect of reality, often seen as the counterpart to Shakti; Tantra seeks to unite Shiva (consciousness) and Shakti (energy).

Non-Dualism (Advaita): The belief that Shiva and Shakti are ultimately one, and the goal is to realize this oneness within oneself.

Key Practices (Tantric Methods)

Mantra: Chanting sacred syllables or phrases for spiritual power.

Yantra/Mandala: Using geometric diagrams as visual aids for meditation and deity invocation.

Yoga & Pranayama: Yogic postures and breath control to channel energy.

Ritual (Puja): Ceremonial worship of deities, often with specific, esoteric rites.

Kundalini Yoga: Awakening the dormant spiritual energy (Kundalini) at the base of the spine.

Goals

Enlightenment/Liberation (Mukti): Achieving oneness with the divine.

Enjoyment (Bhukti): Experiencing the world fully and skillfully, not renouncing it.

Transformation: Using the body and mind as tools for spiritual growth, not seeing them as obstacles.

Tantra vs. Mainstream Hinduism

Tantra offers a faster, more direct path than traditional Vedic methods, making it suitable for the current age (Kali Yuga).

It often integrates aspects of daily life and the physical body into the spiritual path, viewing them as potential vehicles for awakening.

Common Misconceptions

Tantra is often misunderstood as solely focusing on sexual practices (Maithuna), but this is just one ritualistic component within a much broader system of spiritual disciplines.

Tantra (/ˈtʌnrə/; Sanskrit: तन्त्र, lit. 'expansion-device, salvation-spreader; loom, weave, warp') is an esoteric yogic tradition that developed on the Indian subcontinent beginning in the middle of the 1st millennium CE, initially within Shaivism and Shaktism, and subsequently in Mahayana Buddhism and Vaishnavism.[1] The Tantras focus on sādhana, encompassing dīkṣā, rituals, and yoga, within a ritual framework that includes bodily purification, divine self-creation through mantra, dhyāna, pūjā, mudrā, mantra recitation, and the use of yantras or maṇḍalas, despite variations in deities and mantras. They present complex cosmologies, viewing the body as divine and typically reflecting the union of Shiva and Shakti as the path to liberation. Tantric goals include siddhi (supernatural accomplishment), bhoga (worldly enjoyment), and Kuṇḍalinī's ascent, while also addressing states of possession (āveśa) and exorcism.

The term tantra, in the Indian traditions, also means any systematic broadly applicable "text, theory, system, method, instrument, technique or practice".[2][3] A key feature of these traditions is the use of mantras, and thus they are commonly referred to as Mantramārga ("Path of Mantra") in Hinduism or Mantrayāna ("Mantra Vehicle") and

Guhyamantra ("Secret Mantra") in Buddhism.[4][5]

In Buddhism, the Vajrayana traditions are known for tantric ideas and practices, which are based on Indian Buddhist Tantras.[6] They include Indo-Tibetan Buddhism, Chinese Esoteric Buddhism, Japanese Shingon Buddhism and Nepalese Newar Buddhism. Although Southern Esoteric Buddhism does not directly reference the tantras, its practices and ideas parallel them. In Buddhism, tantra has influenced the art and iconography of Tibetan and East Asian Buddhism, as well as historic cave temples of India and the art of Southeast Asia.[7][8][9]

Tantric Hindu and Buddhist traditions have also influenced other Eastern religious traditions such as Jainism, the Tibetan Bön tradition, Daoism, and the Japanese Shintō tradition.[10] Certain modes of worship, such as Puja, are considered tantric in their conception and rituals. Hindu temple building also generally conforms to the iconography of tantra.[note 1][11] Hindu texts describing these topics are called Tantras, Āgamas or Samhitās.[12][13] Though Western views often equate Tantra with sex, scholars emphasize that sexual practices in tantric traditions are rare, highly restricted to initiated adepts, and serve as a means of spiritual transcendence rather than an end in themselves.

Etymology

Tantra (Sanskrit: तन्त्र) literally means "loom, warp, weave".[14][2][15] According to Padoux, the verbal root Tan means: "to extend", "to spread", "to spin out", "weave", "display", "put forth", and "compose". Therefore, by extension, it can also mean "system", "doctrine", or "work".[16]

The connotation of the word tantra to mean an esoteric practice or religious ritualism is a colonial era European invention.[17][18][19] This term is based on the metaphor of weaving, states Ron Barrett, where the Sanskrit root tan means the warping of threads on a loom.[2] It implies "interweaving of traditions and teachings as threads" into a text, technique or practice.[2][15]

The word appears in the hymns of the Rigveda such as in 10.71, with the meaning of "warp (weaving)".[14] It is found in many other Vedic era texts, such as in section 10.7.42 of the Atharvaveda and many Brahmanas.[14][20] In these and post-Vedic texts, the contextual meaning of Tantra is that which is "principal or essential part, main point, model, framework, feature".[14] In the Smritis and epics of Hinduism (and Jainism), the term means "doctrine, rule, theory, method, technique or chapter" and the word appears both as a separate word and as a common suffix, such as atma-tantra meaning "doctrine or theory of Atman (Self)".[14][20]

The term "Tantra" after about 500 BCE, in Buddhism, Hinduism and Jainism is a bibliographic category, just like the word Sutra (which means "sewing together", mirroring the metaphor of "weaving together" in Tantra). The same Buddhist texts are sometimes referred to as tantra or sutra; for example, Vairocabhisambodhi-tantra is also referred to as Vairocabhisambodhi-sutra.[21] The various contextual meanings of the word Tantra vary with the Indian text and are summarized in the appended table.

Definition

Ancient and medieval era

The 5th-century BCE scholar Pāṇini in his Sutra 1.4.54–55 of Sanskrit grammar, cryptically explains tantra through the example of "Sva-tantra" (Sanskrit: स्वतन्त्र), which he states means "independent" or a person who is his own "warp, cloth, weaver, promoter, karta (actor)".[23] Patanjali in his Mahābhāṣya quotes and accepts Panini's definition, then discusses or mentions it at a greater length, in 18 instances, stating that its metaphorical definition of "warp (weaving), extended cloth" is relevant to many contexts.[38] The word tantra, states Patanjali, means "principal, main".

He uses the same example of svatantra as a composite word of "sva" (self) and tantra, then stating "svatantra" means "one who is self-dependent, one who is his own master, the principal thing for whom is himself", thereby interpreting the definition of tantra.[23] Patanjali also offers a semantic definition of Tantra, stating that it is structural rules, standard procedures, centralized guide or knowledge in any field that applies to many elements.[38]

Starting in the early centuries of the common era, newly revealed Tantras centering on Vishnu, Shiva or Shakti emerged.[39] There are tantric lineages in all main forms of modern Hinduism, such as the Shaiva Siddhanta tradition, the Shakta sect of Shri Vidya, the Kaula, and Kashmir Shaivism.

The ancient Mimamsa school of Hinduism uses the term tantra extensively, and its scholars offer various definitions. For example:

When an action or a thing, once complete, becomes beneficial in several matters to one person, or to many people, that is known as Tantra. For example, a lamp placed amidst many priests. In contrast, that which benefits by its repetition is called Āvāpa, such as massaging with oil. (...)

—Sabara, 6th century, [25][40]

Medieval texts present their own definitions of Tantra. Kāmikā-tantra, for example, gives the following explanation of the term tantra:

Because it elaborates (tan) copious and profound matters, especially relating to the principles of reality (tattva) and sacred mantras, and because it provides liberation (tra), it is called a tantra.[32]

Modern era

The occultist and businessman Pierre Bernard (1875–1955) is widely credited with introducing the philosophy and practices of tantra to the American people, at the same time creating a somewhat misleading impression of its connection to sex.[41] That popular sexualization is more accurately regarded as the western Neo-Tantra movement.

While hugely influential on Hindu practices and ritual, the Tantric traditions are poorly understood by contemporary Hindus.[42] Likewise, western scholarship has often ignored this important aspect of Indian and Hindu-culture.[42]

Many definitions of Tantra have been proposed since, and there is no universally accepted definition.[43] André Padoux, in his review of Tantra definitions offers two, then rejects both. One definition, according to Padoux, is found among Tantra practitioners – it is any "system of observances" about the vision of man and the cosmos where correspondences between the inner world of the person and the macrocosmic reality play an essential role. Another definition, more common among observers and non-practitioners, is some "set of mechanistic rituals, omitting entirely the ideological side".[44]

Tantric traditions have been studied mostly from textual and historical perspectives. Anthropological work on living Tantric tradition is scarce, and ethnography has rarely engaged with the study of Tantra. This is arguably a result of the modern construction of Tantrism as occult, esoteric and secret. Some scholars have tried to demystify the myth of secrecy in contemporary Tantric traditions, suggesting new methodological avenues to overcome the ethical and epistemological problems in the study of living Tantric traditions.[45]

According to David N. Lorenzen, two different kinds of definitions of Tantra exist, narrow and broad.[13] According to the narrow definition, Tantrism, or "Tantric religion", is the elite traditions directly based on the Sanskrit texts called the Tantras, Samhitas, and Agamas.[13][46] Lorenzen's "broad definition" extends this by including a broad range of "magical beliefs and practices" such as Yoga and Shaktism.[46][47]

The term "yoga" is broadly attributed to many traditions and practices, including the western assumption that yoga is synonymous with physical stretching and little more. The Yoga Sutras of Patanjali define yoga as "the stilling of the disturbances of the mind".[48] Richard Payne states that Tantra has been commonly but incorrectly associated with sex, given popular culture's prurient obsession with intimacy. Tantra has been labelled as the "yoga of ecstasy", driven by senseless ritualistic libertinism.[21] This is far from the diverse and complex understanding of what Tantra means to those Buddhists, Hindu and Jains who practice it.[21]

David Gray disagrees with broad generalizations and states that defining Tantra is a difficult task because "Tantra traditions are manifold, spanning several religious traditions and cultural worlds. As a result they are also diverse, which makes it a significant challenge to come up with an adequate definition".[49] The challenge of defining Tantra is compounded by the fact that it has been a historically significant part of major Indian religions, including Buddhism, Hinduism and Jainism, both in and outside South Asia and East Asia.[50] To its practitioners, Tantra is defined as a combination of texts, techniques, rituals, monastic practices, meditation, yoga, and ideology.[51]

According to Georg Feuerstein,

The scope of topics discussed in the Tantras is considerable. They deal with the creation and history of the world; the names and functions of a great variety of male and female deities and other higher beings; the types of ritual worship (especially of Goddesses); magic, sorcery, and divination; esoteric "physiology" (the mapping of the subtle or psychic body); the awakening of the mysterious serpent power (kundalinî-shakti); techniques of bodily and mental purification; the nature of enlightenment; and not least, sacred sexuality.[52]

Hindu puja, temples and iconography all show tantric influence.[note 1] These texts, states Gavin Flood, contain representation of "the body in philosophy, in ritual and in art", which are linked to "techniques of the body, methods or technologies developed within the tantric traditions intended to transform body and self".[53]

The term tantrism is a 19th-century European invention not present in any Asian language;[18] compare "Sufism", of similar Orientalist origin. According to Padoux, Tantrism is a Western term and notion, not a category that is used by Tantrikas themselves.[17] The term was introduced by 19th-century Indologists, with limited knowledge of India and in whose view Tantrism was a particular, unusual and minority practice in contrast to Indian traditions they believed to be mainstream.[17]

Robert Brown similarly notes that "tantrism" is a construct of Western scholarship, not a concept of the religious system itself.[55] He defines Tantrism as an apologetic label of Westerners for a system that they little understand that is "not coherent" and which is "an accumulated set of practices and ideas from various sources, that has varied between its practitioners within a group, varied across groups, across geography and over its history". It is a system, adds Brown, that gives each follower the freedom to mix Tantric elements with non-Tantric aspects, to challenge and transgress any and all norms, experiment with "the mundane to reach the supramundane".[43]

Teun Goudriaan in his 1981 review of Hindu Tantrism, states that Tantrism usually means a "systematic quest for salvation or spiritual excellence" by realizing and fostering the divine within one's own body, one that is simultaneous union of the masculine-feminine and spirit-matter, and has the ultimate goal of realizing the "primal blissful state of non-duality".[56] It is typically a methodically striven system, consisting of voluntarily chosen specific practices which may include Tantric items such as mantras (bijas), geometric patterns and symbols (mandala), gestures (mudra), mapping of the microcosm within one's body to the macrocosmic elements outside as the subtle body (kundalini yoga), assignments of icons and sounds (nyasa), meditation (dhyana), ritual worship (puja), initiation (diksha) and others.[57] Tantrism, adds Goudriaan, is a living system that is decidedly monistic, but with wide variations, and it is impossible to be dogmatic about a simple or fixed definition.[58]

Tantrism is an overarching term for "Tantric traditions", states David Gray in a 2016 review, that combine Vedic, yogic and meditative traditions from 5th-century Hinduism as well as rival Buddhist and Jain traditions.[42] it is a neologism of western scholars and does not reflect the self-understanding of any particular tantric tradition. While Goudriaan's description is useful, adds Gray, there is no single defining universal characteristic common to all Tantra traditions, being an open evolving system.[19] Tantrism, whether Buddhist or Hindu, can best be characterized as practices, a set of techniques, with a strong focus on rituals and meditation, by those who believe that it is a path to liberation that is characterized by both knowledge and freedom.[59]

Tantrika

According to Padoux, the term "Tantrika" is based on a comment by Kulluka Bhatta on Manava Dharmasastra 2.1, who contrasted vaidika and tantrika forms of Śruti (canonical texts). The Tantrika, to Bhatta, is that literature which forms a parallel part of the Hindu tradition, independent of the Vedic corpus. The Vedic and non-Vedic (Tantric) paths are seen as two different approaches to ultimate reality, the Vedic approach based on Brahman, and Tantrika being based on the non-Vedic Āgama texts.[60] Despite Bhatta attempt to clarify, states Padoux, in reality Hindus and Buddhists have historically felt free to borrow and blend ideas from all sources, Vedic, non-Vedic and in the case of Buddhism, its own canonical works.[61]

One of the key differences between the Tantric and non-Tantric traditions – whether it be orthodox Buddhism, Hinduism or Jainism – is their assumptions about the need for monastic or ascetic life.[62] Non-Tantrika, or orthodox traditions in all three major ancient Indian religions, hold that the worldly life of a householder is one driven by desires and greeds which are a serious impediment to spiritual liberation (moksha, nirvana, kaivalya). These orthodox traditions teach renunciation of householder life, a mendicant's life of simplicity and leaving all attachments to become a monk or nun. In contrast, the Tantrika traditions hold, states Robert Brown, that "both enlightenment and worldly success" are achievable, and that "this world need not be shunned to achieve enlightenment".[62][63] Yet, even this supposed categorical divergence is debatable, e.g. Bhagavad Gita v.2:48–53, including: "Yoga is skill in [the performance of] actions." [64]

Features

The Tantras emphasize spiritual practice or sādhana, including initiation (dīkṣā), rituals, and yoga. A standard ritual framework is present in the Tantras, despite variations in deities and mantras, involving body purification through symbolic dissolution, creation of a divine body or self via mantra, internal worship or dhyāna (visualization), and external worship or pūjā, utilizing hand gestures (mudrā), mantra chanting, and sacred diagrams (yantra, maṇḍala). The Tantras feature complex cosmological hierarchies that incorporate earlier traditions' cosmic structures, with the highest Śaiva Siddhānta realm surpassed by additional realms in Kashmir Śaiva traditions. The body is seen as divine, containing the cosmic order, reflecting the polarity of the male deity and his consort, the feminine energy, often Shiva and his Shakti as Goddess Kuṇḍalinī, with their union symbolizing liberation. The Tantras focus on attaining mystical powers (siddhi) and experiencing bliss in higher realms (bhoga) as part of the practitioner's spiritual journey, also interpreted as the movement of Kuṇḍalinī through the body. The Tantras address possession (āveśa) and the practice of exorcism.[65]

History

Proto-tantric elements in Indian religions

While Tantra arose in the 5th century CE in Shaivite religions, practices and ideas can be found in Indian religion and history which may have been formative to Tantric practices and ideas.

Proto-tantric elements in Vedic religion

Rig Veda

The Keśin hymn of the Rig Veda (10.136) describes the "wild loner" who, states Karel Werner, "carrying within oneself fire and poison, heaven and earth, ranging from enthusiasm and creativity to depression and agony, from the heights of spiritual bliss to the heaviness of earth-bound labor".[66] The Rigveda uses words of admiration for these loners,[66] and whether it is related to Tantra or not, has been variously interpreted. According to David Lorenzen, it describes munis (sages) experiencing Tantra-like "ecstatic, altered states of consciousness" and gaining the ability "to fly on the wind".[67] In contrast, Werner suggests that these are early Yoga pioneers and accomplished yogis of the ancient pre-Buddhist Indian tradition, and that this Vedic hymn is speaking of those "lost in thoughts" whose "personalities are not bound to earth, for they follow the path of the mysterious wind".[66] However, Patrick Olivelle suggests that in the early Vedic-Brahmanical texts, some of which predate the 3rd-century BCE ruler Ashoka, Brahmana and Śramaṇa (ascetics) were neither distinct nor opposed. The later distinctions were semantic developments possibly influenced by the appropriation of the term Śramaṇa by Buddhism and Jainism.[68]

Upanishads

The two oldest Upanishadic scriptures of Hinduism, the Brihadaranyaka Upanishad in section 4.2 and Chandogya Upanishad in section 8.6, refer to nadis (hati) in presenting their theory on how the Atman (Self) and the body are connected and interdependent through energy carrying arteries when one is awake or sleeping, but they do not mention anything related to Tantric practices.[69] The Shvetashvatara Upanishad describes breath control that became a standard part of Yoga, but Tantric practices do not appear in it.[67][70] Likewise, the Taittiriya Upanishad discusses a central channel running through the body and various Vedic texts mention the bodily pranas (vital breaths) that move around in the body and animate it. However, the idea of consciously moving the bodily pranas through yoga is not found in these sources.[71] According to Lorenzen, Vedic ideas related to the body later diversified into the "mystical anatomy" of nadis and chakras found in Tantra.[72] The yogic component of Tantrism appears clearly in Bāṇabhaṭṭa's Harshacharita and Daṇḍin's Dashakumaracharita.[73] In contrast to this theory of Lorenzen, other scholars such as Mircea Eliade consider Yoga and the evolution of Yogic practices to be separate and distinct from the evolution of Tantra and Tantric practices.[74]

Tapas and spiritualized sexual energy

According to Geoffrey Samuel, the inner development of a spiritual energy called tapas becomes a central element of Vedic religion in the Brahmanas and Srauta texts. In these texts, ascetic practices allow a holy man to build up tapas, a kind of magical inner heat, which allows them to perform all sorts of magical feats as well as granting visions and divine revelations.[75] Samuel also notes that in the Mahabharata, one of the commonest use of the term "yoga" refers to "a dying warrior transferring himself at death to the sphere of the sun through yoga, a practice that links up with Upanisadic references to the channel to the crown of the head as the pathway by which one can travel through the solar orb to the World of Brahman." This practice of transferring one's consciousness at death is still an important practice in Tibetan Buddhism.[76] Samuel also notes that sexual rituals and a spiritualized sexuality are mentioned in the late Upanishads. According to Samuel, "late Vedic texts treat sexual intercourse as symbolically equivalent to the Vedic sacrifice, and ejaculation of semen as the offering." This theme can be found in the Jaiminiya Brahmana, the Chandogya Upanisad, and the Brhadaranyaka Upanisad. The Brhadaranyaka contains various sexual rituals and practices which are mostly aimed at obtaining a child which are concerned with the loss of male virility and power.[77]

Yogini cults

David Gordon White views Yogini cults as foundational to early tantra but disagrees with scholars who maintain that the roots of such cults lie in an "autochthonous non-Vedic source" such as indigenous tribes or the Indus Valley civilization.[78] Instead, White suggests Vedic Srauta texts mention offerings to goddesses Rākā, Sinīvālī, and Kuhū in a manner similar to a tantric ritual.[79]

Atharvaveda

Frederick Smith – a professor of Sanskrit and Classical Indian Religions, considers Tantra to be a religious movement parallel to the Bhakti movement of the 1st millennium CE.[80] Tantra along with Ayurveda, states Smith, has traditionally been attributed to Atharvaveda, but this attribution is one of respect not of historicity. Ayurveda has primarily been an empirical practice with Vedic roots, but Tantra has been an esoteric, folk movement without grounding that cannot be traced to anything in Atharvaveda or any other vedic text.[80]

Proto-Tantric elements in Buddhism

Pre-tantric Buddhism contains elements which could be seen as proto-tantric, and which may have influenced the development of the Buddhist Tantric tradition. The use of magical chants or incantations can be found in the early Buddhist texts as well as in some Mahayana sutras.[81] These magical spells or chants were used for various reasons, such as for protection, and for the generation of auspiciousness.[82] Mahayana incantations are called dhāraṇīs. Some Mahayana sutras incorporate the use of mantras, a central feature of tantric practice.

According to Geoffrey Samuel, sramana groups like the Buddhists and Jains were associated with the dead. Samuel notes that they "frequently settled at sites associated with the dead and seem to have taken over a significant role in relation to the spirits of the dead." To step into this realm required entering a dangerous and impure supernatural realm from the Indian perspective. This association with death remains a feature of modern Buddhism, and in Buddhist countries today, Buddhist monks and other ritual specialists are in charge of the dead.[83] Thus, the association of tantric practitioners with charnel grounds and death imagery is preceded by early Buddhist contact with these sites of the dead.

Some scholars think that the development of tantra may have been influenced by the cults of nature spirit-deities like Yakṣas and Nagas.[84] Yakṣa cults were an important part of early Buddhism. Yakṣas are powerful nature spirits which were sometimes seen as guardians or protectors.[85] Yakṣas like Kubera are also associated with magical incantations. Kubera is said to have provided the Buddhist sangha with protection spells in the Āṭānāṭiya Sutta.[86] These spirit deities also included numerous female deities (yakṣiṇī) that can be found depicted in major Buddhist sites like Sanchi and Bharhut. In early Buddhist texts there is also mention of fierce demon like deities called rākṣasa and rākṣasī, like the children-eating Hārītī.[87] They are also present in Mahayana texts, such as in Chapter 26 of the Lotus Sutra which includes a dialogue between the Buddha and a group of rākṣasīs, who swear to uphold and protect the sutra. These figures also teach magical dhāraṇīs to protect followers of the Lotus Sutra.[88]

A key element of Buddhist Tantric practice is the visualization of deities in meditation. This practice is actually found in pre-tantric Buddhist texts as well. In Mahayana sutras like the Pratyutpanna Samādhi and the three Amitabha Pure land sutras.[89] There are other Mahāyāna sutras which contain what may be called "proto-tantric" material such as the Gandavyuha and the Dasabhumika which might have served as a source for the imagery found in later Tantric texts.[90] According to Samuel, the Golden Light Sutra (c. 5th century at the latest) contains what could be seen as a proto-mandala. In the second chapter, a bodhisattva has a vision of "a vast building made of beryl and with divine jewels and celestial perfumes. Four lotus-seats appear in the four directions, with four Buddhas seated upon them: Aksobhya in the East, Ratnaketu in the South, Amitayus in the West and Dundubhīśvara in the North."[91]

A series of artwork discovered in Gandhara, in modern-day Pakistan, dating from about the 1st century CE, show Buddhist and Hindu monks holding skulls.[92] The legend corresponding to these artworks is found in Buddhist texts, and describes monks "who tap skulls and forecast the future rebirths of the person to whom that skull belonged".[92][93] According to Robert Brown, these Buddhist skull-tapping reliefs suggest that tantric practices may have been in vogue by the 1st century CE.[92]

Proto-Tantric elements in Shaktism and Shaivism

The Mahabharata, the Harivamsa, and the Devi Mahatmya in the Markandeya Purana all mention the fierce, demon-killing manifestations of the Great Goddess, Mahishamardini, identified with Durga-Parvati.[94] These suggest that Shaktism, reverence and worship for the Goddess in Indian culture, was an established tradition by the early centuries of the 1st millennium.[95] Padoux mentions an inscription from 423 to 424 CE which mentions the founding of a temple to terrifying deities called "the mothers".[96] However, this does not mean Tantric rituals and practices were as yet a part of either Hindu or Buddhist traditions. "Apart from the somewhat dubious reference to Tantra in the Gangadhar inscription of 423 CE", states David Lorenzen, it is only 7th-century Banabhatta's Kadambari which provide convincing proof of Tantra and Tantric texts.[29]

Shaivite ascetics seem to have been involved in the initial development of Tantra, particularly the transgressive elements dealing with the charnel ground. According to Samuel, one group of Shaiva ascetics, the Pasupatas, practiced a form of spirituality that made use of shocking and disreputable behavior later found in a tantric context, such as dancing, singing, and smearing themselves with ashes.[97]

Early Tantric practices are sometimes attributed to Shaiva ascetics associated with Bhairava, the Kapalikas ("skull men", also called Somasiddhatins or Mahavartins).[98] [99][100] Besides the shocking fact that they frequented cremation grounds and carried human skulls, little is known about them, and there is a paucity of primary sources on the Kapalikas.[101][100] Samuel also states that the sources depict them as using alcohol and sex freely, that they were associated with terrifying female spirit-deities called yoginis and dakinis, and that they were believed to possess magical powers, such as flight.[102]

Kapalikas are depicted in fictional works and also widely disparaged in Buddhist, Hindu and Jain texts of the 1st millennium CE.[101][103] In Hāla's Gatha-saptasati (composed by the 5th century AD), for example, the story calls a female character Kapalika, whose lover dies, he is cremated, she takes his cremation ashes and smears her body with it.

[99] The 6th-century Varāhamihira mentions Kapalikas in his literary works.[103] Some of the Kāpālīka practices mentioned in these texts are those found in Shaiva Hinduism and Vajrayana Buddhism, and scholars disagree on who influenced whom.[104][105]

These early historical mentions are in passing and appear to be Tantra-like practices, they are not detailed nor comprehensive presentation of Tantric beliefs and practices. Epigraphic references to the Kaulas Tantric practices are rare. Reference is made in the early 9th century to vama (left-hand) Tantras of the Kaulas.[106] Literary evidence suggests Tantric Buddhism was probably flourishing by the 7th century.[67] Matrikas, or fierce mother goddesses that later are closely linked to Tantra practices, appear both in Buddhist and Hindu arts and literature between the 7th and 10th centuries.[107]

Buddhist Mahasiddhas practicing the sexual yoga of karmamudrā ("action seal") According to Peter C. Bisschop, the expansion of the Pāśupata Śaivite movement (early CE) throughout North India gave rise to different forms of Śaivism, eventually leading to the emergence of various tantric traditions.[108]

According to David B. Gray, Vajrayana originated from pre-existing Tantric traditions, also known as 'Tantrism', which emerged within Hinduism during the first millennium CE. These early Hindu tantric practices had a profound influence on South Asian Mahāyāna Buddhism, leading to the emergence of distinct Buddhist tantric traditions in the 7th century CE. These traditions quickly spread across Southeast, East, and Central Asia, giving rise to unique forms in East Asia and Tibet.[109]

According to Gavin Flood, the earliest date for the Tantra texts related to Tantric practices is 600 CE, though most of them were probably composed after the 8th century onwards.[110] According to Flood, very little is known about who created the Tantras, nor much is known about the social status of these and medieval era Tantrikas.[111]

Flood states that the pioneers of Tantra may have been ascetics who lived at the cremation grounds, possibly from "above low-caste groups", and were probably non-Brahmanical and possibly part of an ancient tradition.[112][113][114] By the early medieval times, their practices may have included the imitation of deities such as Kali and Bhairava, with offerings of non-vegetarian food, alcohol and sexual substances. According to this theory, these practitioners would have invited their deities to enter them, then reverted the role in order to control that deity and gain its power.[111] These ascetics would have been supported by low castes living at the cremation places.[111]

According to Samuel, a key element in the development of tantra was "the gradual transformation of local and regional deity cults through which fierce male and, particularly, female deities came to take a leading role in the place of the yaksa deities." Samuel states that this took place between the fifth to eighth centuries CE.[115] According to Samuel, there are two main scholarly opinions on these terrifying goddesses which became incorporated into Śaiva and Buddhist Tantra. The first view is that they originate out of a pan-Indian religious substrate that was not Vedic. Another opinion is to see these fierce goddesses as developing out of the Vedic religion.[116]

Alexis Sanderson has argued that tantric practices originally developed in a Śaiva milieu and were later adopted by Buddhists. He cites numerous elements that are found in the Śaiva Vidyapitha literature, including whole passages and lists of pithas, that seem to have been directly borrowed by Vajrayana texts.[117] This has been criticized by Ronald M. Davidson, however, due to the uncertain date of the Vidyapitha texts.[118] Davidson argues that the pithas seem to have been neither uniquely Buddhist nor Śaiva, but frequented by both groups. He also states that the Śaiva tradition was also involved in the appropriation of local deities and that tantra may have been influenced by tribal Indian religions and their deities.[119] Samuel writes that "the female divinities may well best be understood in terms of a distinct Śākta milieu from which both Śaivas and Buddhists were borrowing", [120] but that other elements, like the Kapalika style practices, are more clearly derived from a Śaiva tradition.[120]

There is considerable evidence that the Hevajra and Cakrasamvara tantras borrow significant portions from Saiva sources. The text Cakrasamvara and its commentaries have revealed numerous attempts by the Buddhists to enlarge and modify it, both to remove references to Saiva deities and to add more Buddhist technical terminology. [121]

Vamachara and Dakshinachara

Vamachara

Vamachara is used to describe a particular mode of tantric worship or sadhana (spiritual practice) that uses heterodox methods to sublimate for spiritual growth. These tantric practices also included secret initiation ceremonies in which individuals would enter the tantric family (kula) and receive the secret mantras of the tantric deities. These initiations included the consumption of the sexual substances (semen and female sexual secretions) produced through ritual sex between the guru and his consort. These substances were seen as spiritually powerful and were also used as offerings for tantric deities.[122] For both Śaivas and Buddhists, tantric practices often took place at important sacred sites (pithas) associated with fierce goddesses.[123] Samuel writes that "we do not have a clear picture of how this network of pilgrimage sites arose." Whatever the case, it seems that it was in these ritual spaces visited by both Buddhists and Śaivas that the practice of Kaula and Anuttarayoga Tantra developed during the eighth and ninth centuries.[124] Besides the practices outlined above, these sites also saw the practice of animal sacrifice as blood offerings to Śākta goddesses like Kamakhya. This practice is mentioned in Śākta texts like the Kālikāpurāṇa and the Yoginītantra. In some of these sites, such as Kamakhya Pitha, animal sacrifice is still widely practiced by Śāktas.[125] Samuel states that transgressive and antinomian tantric practices developed in both Buddhist and Brahmanical (mainly Śaiva ascetics like the Kapalikas) contexts and that "Śaivas and Buddhists borrowed extensively from each other, with varying degrees of acknowledgement." According to Samuel, these deliberately transgressive practices included, "night time orgies in charnel grounds, involving the eating of human flesh, the use of ornaments, bowls and musical instruments made from human bones, sexual relations while seated on corpses, and the like." [126] Samuel writes that the Saiva Tantra tradition appears to have originated as ritual sorcery carried out by hereditary caste groups (kulas) and associated with sex, death and fierce goddesses. The initiation rituals involved the consumption of the mixed sexual secretions (the clan essence) of a male guru and his consort. These practices were adopted by Kapalika styled ascetics and influenced the early Nath siddhas. Over time, the more extreme external elements were replaced by internalized yogas that make use of the subtle body. Sexual ritual became a way to reach the liberating wisdom taught in the tradition.[127]

Another key and innovative feature of medieval tantric systems was the development of internal yogas based on elements of the subtle body (sūkṣma śarīra). This subtle anatomy held that there were channels in the body (nadis) through which certain substances or energies (such as vayu, prana, kundalini, and shakti) flowed. These yogas involved moving these energies through the body to clear out certain knots or blockages (granthi) and to direct the energies to the central channel (avadhuti, sushumna). These yogic practices are also closely related to the practice of sexual yoga, since sexual intercourse was seen as being involved in the stimulation of the flow of these energies.[128] Samuel thinks that these subtle body practices may have been influenced by Chinese Daoist practices.[129]

One of the earliest mentions of sexual yoga practice is in the Buddhist Mahāyānasūtrālamkāra of Asanga (c. 5th century), which states "Supreme self-control is achieved in the reversal of sexual intercourse in the blissful Buddha-poise and the untrammelled vision of one's spouse." [130] According to David Snellgrove, the text's mention of a 'reversal of sexual intercourse' might indicate the practice of withholding ejaculation. Snellgrove states that it is possible that sexual yoga was already being practiced in Buddhist circles at this time, and that Asanga saw it as a valid practice.[131] Likewise, Samuel thinks that there is a possibility that sexual yoga existed in the fourth or fifth centuries (though not in the same transgressive tantric contexts where it was later practiced).[132]

It is only in the seventh and eighth centuries however that we find substantial evidence for these sexual yogas. Unlike previous Upanishadic sexual rituals however, which seem to have been associated with Vedic sacrifice and mundane ends like childbirth, these sexual yogas were associated with the movement of subtle body energies (like Kundalini and Chandali, which were also seen as goddesses), and also with spiritual ends.[133] These practices seemed to have developed at around the same time in both Saiva and Buddhist circles, and are associated with figures such as Tirumūlar, Gorakhnath, Virupa, Naropa. The tantric mahasiddhas developed yogic systems with subtle body and sexual elements which could lead to magical powers (siddhis), immortality, as well as spiritual liberation (moksha, nirvana). Sexual yoga was seen as one way of producing a blissful expansion of consciousness that could lead to liberation.[132]

According to Jacob Dalton, ritualized sexual yoga (along with the sexual elements of the tantric initiation ritual, like the consumption of sexual fluids) first appears in Buddhist works called Mahayoga tantras (which include the Guhyagarbha and Guhyasamaja). [134][135] These texts "focused on the body's interior, on the anatomical details of the male and female sexual organs and the pleasure generated through sexual union." In these texts, sexual energy was also seen as a powerful force that could be harnessed for spiritual practice and according to Samuel "perhaps create the state of bliss and loss of personal identity which is homologised with liberating insight." [134] These sexual yogas continued to develop further into more complex systems which are found in texts dating from about the ninth or tenth century, including the Saiva Kaulajñānanirṇaya and Kubjikātantra as well as the Buddhist Hevajra, and Cakrasamvara tantras which make use of charnel ground symbolism and fierce goddesses.[136] Samuel writes that these later texts also combine the sexual yoga with a system of controlling the energies of the subtle body.[129]

The Buddhists developed their own corpus of Tantras, which also drew on various Mahayana doctrines and practices, as well as on elements of the fierce goddess tradition and also on elements from the Śaiva traditions (such as deities like Bhairava, which were seen as having been subjugated and converted to Buddhism).[110][137] Some Buddhist tantras (sometimes called "lower" or "outer" tantras) which are earlier works, do not make use of transgression, sex and fierce deities. These earlier Buddhist tantras mainly reflect a development of Mahayana theory and practice (like deity visualization) and a focus on ritual and purity.[138] Between the eighth and tenth centuries, new tantras emerged which included fierce deities, kula style sexual initiations, subtle body practices and sexual yoga. The later Buddhist tantras are known as the "inner" or "unsurpassed yoga" (Anuttarayoga or "Yogini") tantras. According to Samuel, it seems that these sexual practices were not initially practiced by Buddhist monastics and instead developed outside of the monastic establishments among traveling siddhas.[139]

Dakshinachara

Dakshinachara is used to describe tantric sects that do not engage in heterodox practices. The Brahma Yamala, a tantric text, asserts that there are three currents of tradition (dakshina, vama, and madhyama) characterized respectively by the predominance of each of the three gunas (sattva, rajas, and tamas). According to this text, dakshina is characterized by sattva, and is pure; madhyama (a balance of the two), characterized by rajas, is mixed; and vama, characterized by tamas, is impure. The tantras of each class follow a particular line of spiritual practice.[140] N. N. Bhattacharyya explains the Sanskrit technical term ācāra as follows:

The means of spiritual attainment which varies from person to person according to competence.... Ācāras are generally of seven kinds – Veda, Vaiṣṇava, Śaiva, Dakṣiṇa, Vāma, Siddhānta, and Kaula, falling into two broad categories – Dakṣiṇa and Vāma. Interpretations vary regarding the nature and grouping of the ācāras.[141]

From the 8th to the 14th century, Tantric traditions rose to prominence and flourished throughout India and beyond.[142][143][18][144] By the 10th century, the main elements of tantric practice had reached maturity and were being practiced in Saiva and Buddhist contexts. This period has been referred to as the 'Tantric Age' by some scholars due to prevalence of Tantra.[145] Also by the 10th century, numerous tantric texts (variously called Agamas, Samhitas and Tantras) had been written, particularly in Kashmir, Nepal and Bengal.[146] By this time, Tantric texts had also been translated into regional languages such as Tamil, and Tantric practices had spread across South Asia.[147] Tantra also spread into Tibet, Indonesia and China. Gavin Flood describes the Tantric age as follows:

Tantrism has been so pervasive that all of Hinduism after the eleventh century, perhaps with the exception of the vedic Srauta tradition, is influenced by it. All forms of Saiva, Vaisnava and Smarta religion, even those forms which wanted to distance themselves from Tantrism, absorbed elements derived from the Tantras.[147]

Though the whole northern and Himalayan part of India was involved in the development of tantra, Kashmir was a particularly important center, both Saiva and Buddhist and numerous key tantric texts were written there according to Padoux.[148] According to Alexis Sanderson, the Śaiva Tantra traditions of medieval Kashmir were mainly divided between the dualistic Śaiva Siddhanta and the non-dualist theology found in Śākta lineages like the Trika, Krama and Kaula. The non-dualists generally accepted and made use of sexual and transgressive practices, while the dualists mostly rejected them.[149] Saiva tantra was especially successful because it managed to forge strong ties with South Asian kings who valued the power (shakti) of fierce deities like the warrior goddess Durga as a way to increase their own royal power. These kings took part in royal rituals led by Saiva "royal gurus" in which they were symbolically married to tantric deities and thus became the earthly representative of male gods like Shiva. Saiva tantra could also employ a variety of protection and destruction rituals which could be used for the benefit of the kingdom and the king.[150] Tantric Shaivism was adopted by the kings of Kashmir, as well as by the Somavamshis of Odisha, the Kalachuris, and the Chandelas of Jejakhukti (in Bundelkhand).[151] There is also evidence of state support from the Cambodian Khmer Empire.[152] As noted by Samuel, in spite of the increased depiction of female goddesses, these tantric traditions all seemed to have been mostly "male-directed and male-controlled." [153]

During the Tantric Age, Buddhist Tantra was embraced by the Mahayana Buddhist mainstream and was studied at the great universities such as Nalanda and Vikramashila, from which it spread to Tibet and to the East Asian states of China, Korea, and Japan. This new Tantric Buddhism was supported by the Pala Dynasty (8th–12th century) which supported these centers of learning and also built grand tantric temples and monasteries such as Somapura Mahavihara and Odantapuri while establishing good relations with the Tibetan Empire and Srivijaya Empire where the Buddhist Mahasiddhas of the Vajrayana tradition spread their influence via songs of realization like those collected in the Charyapada which were orally transmitted in various lineages and translated into many different languages over time.[154][155] The later Khmer kings and the Indonesian Srivijaya kingdom also supported tantric Buddhism. According to Samuel, while the sexual and transgressive practices were mostly undertaken in symbolic form (or through visualization) in later Tibetan Buddhist monastic contexts, it seems that in the eighth to tenth century Indian context, they were actually performed. [156]

In the 10th and 11th centuries, both Shaiva and Buddhist tantra evolved into more tame, philosophical, and liberation-oriented religions. This transformation saw a move from external and transgressive rituals towards a more internalized yogic practice focused on attaining spiritual insight. This recasting also made tantric religions much less open to attack by other groups. In Shaivism, this development is often associated with the Kashmiri master Abhinavagupta (c. 950 – 1016 CE) and his followers, as well the movements which were influenced by their work, like the Sri Vidya tradition (which spread as far as South India, and has been referred to as "high" tantra).[157]

In Buddhism, this taming of tantra is associated with the adoption of tantra by Buddhist monastics who sought to incorporate it within the Buddhist Mahayana scholastic framework. Buddhist tantras were written down and scholars like Abhayakaragupta wrote commentaries on them. Another important figure, the Bengali teacher Atisha, wrote a treatise which placed tantra as the culmination of a graduated Mahayana path to awakening, the Bodhipathapradīpa. In his view, one needed to first begin practicing non-tantric Mahayana, and then later one might be ready for tantra. This system became the model for tantric practice among some Tibetan Buddhist schools, like the Gelug. In Tibet, the transgressive and sexual practices of tantra became much less central and tantric practice was seen as suitable only for a small elite group.[158] New tantras continued to be composed during this later period as well, such as the Kalachakra (c. 11th century), which seems to be concerned with converting Buddhists and non-

Buddhists alike, and uniting them together against Islam. The Kalachakra teaches sexual yoga, but also warns not to introduce the practice of ingesting impure substances to beginners, since this is only for advanced yogis. This tantra also seems to want to minimize the impact of the transgressive practices, since it advises tantrikas to outwardly follow the customs of their country.[159]

Another influential development during this period was the codification of tantric yogic techniques that would later become the separate movement known as Hatha Yoga. According to James Mallinson, the original "source text" for Hatha Yoga is the Vajrayana Buddhist Amṛtasiddhi (11th century CE) attributed to the mahasiddha Virupa. This text was later adopted by Saiva yogic traditions (such as the Naths) and is quoted in their texts.[160][161]

Another tradition of Hindu Tantra developed among the Vaishnavas, this was called the Pāñcarātra Agama tradition. This tradition avoided the transgressive and sexual elements that were embraced by the Saivas and the Buddhists.[127] There is also a smaller tantric tradition associated with Surya, the sun god. Jainism also seems to have developed a substantial Tantra corpus based on the Saura tradition, with rituals based on yakshas and yakshinis. However, this Jain tantrism was mainly used for pragmatic purposes like protection, and was not used to attain liberation. Complete manuscripts of these Jain tantras have not survived.[162][163] The Jains also seem to have adopted some of the subtle body practices of tantra, but not sexual yoga.[129] The Svetambara thinker Hemacandra (c. 1089–1172) discusses tantric practices extensively, such as internal meditations on chakras, which betray Kaula and Nath influences.[164]

Reception and later developments

There seems to have been some debate regarding the appropriateness of tantra. Among the Hindus, those belonging to the more orthodox Vedic traditions rejected the Tantras. Meanwhile, tantrikas incorporated Vedic ideas within their own systems, while considering the Tantras as the higher, more refined understanding.[162] Meanwhile, some Tantrikas considered the Tantras to be superior to the Vedas, while others considered them complementary such as Umapati, who is quoted as stating: "The Veda is the cow, the true Agama its milk." [165]

According to Samuel, the great Advaita philosopher Shankara (9th century) "is portrayed in his biography, the Sankaravijaya, as condemning the approaches of various kinds of Tantric practitioners and defeating them through argument or spiritual power." He also is said to have encouraged the replacement of fierce goddesses with benign female deities, and thus to have promoted the Sri Vidya tradition (which worships a peaceful and sweet goddess, Tripura Sundari). Though it is far from certain that Shankara actually campaigned against tantra, he is traditionally seen as someone who purified

Hinduism from transgressive and antinomian tantric practices.[166]

The 14th-century Indian scholar Mādhavācārya (in Sarva-Darsana-Sangraha) wrote copious commentaries on then existing major schools of Indian philosophies and practices, and cited the works of the 10th century Abhinavagupta, who was considered a major and influential Tantra scholar.[167] However, Madhavacharya does not mention Tantra as a separate, distinct religious or ritual-driven practice. The early 20th-century Indian scholar Pandurang Vaman Kane conjectured that Madhavacharya ignored Tantra because it may have been considered scandalous. In contrast, Padoux suggests that Tantra may have been so pervasive by the 13th century that "it was not regarded as being a distinct system." [167]

Hindu tantra, while practiced by some of the general lay population, was eventually overshadowed by the more popular Bhakti movements that swept throughout India from the 15th century onwards. According to Samuel, "these new devotional styles of religion, with their emphasis on emotional submission to a supreme saviour-deity, whether Saivite or Vaisnavite, were better adapted, perhaps, to the subaltern role of non-Muslim groups under Muslim rule." [168] Saiva tantra did remain an important practice among most Saiva ascetics however. [169] Tantric traditions also survived in certain regions, such as among the Naths of Rajasthan, in the Sri Vidya tradition of South India and in the Bengali Bauls. [168]

In Buddhism, while tantra became accepted in the great Mahayana establishments of Nalanda and Vikramashila and spread to the Himalayan regions, it also experienced serious setbacks in other regions, particularly Southeast Asia. In Burma, for example, King Anawratha (1044–1077) is said to have disbanded tantric "Ari" monks. As Theravada Buddhism became dominant in South East Asian states, tantric religions became marginalised in those regions. [170] In Sri Lanka, tantric Buddhism also suffered debilitating setbacks. Initially the large Abhayagiri Monastery was a place where the practice of Vajrayana seems to have flourished during the 8th century. However, Abhayagiri was disbanded and forced to convert to the orthodox Mahāvihāra sect during the reign of Parakramabahu I (1153–1186). [171]

Regarding the reception of tantra during the period of Hindu modernism in the 19th and 20th centuries, Samuel writes that this period saw "a radical reframing of yogic practices away from the Tantric context." Samuel notes that while Hindu Hatha yoga had its origins in a Saiva tantric context,

Given the extremely negative views of Tantra and its sexual and magical practices which prevailed in middle-class India in the late nineteenth and twentieth centuries, and still largely prevail today, this was an embarrassing heritage. Much effort was given by people such as Swami Vivekananda into reconstructing yoga, generally in terms of a selective Vedantic reading of Patañjali's Yogasutra (de Michelis 2004). The effort was largely successful, and many modern Western practitioners of yoga for health and relaxation have little or no knowledge of its original function as a preparation for the internal sexual practices of the Nath tradition.[169]

Buddhist tantra has survived in modern Indo-Tibetan Buddhism, in various Japanese traditions such as Shingon, and in the Newar Buddhism of the Kathmandu Valley.[172] There are also magical quasi-tantric traditions in Southeast Asia, sometimes termed Esoteric Southern Buddhism, though they are not called "tantric" and have been marginalised by state supported modernist forms of Theravada Buddhism.[173]

Tantric traditions

Hindu tantra

Within Hinduism, the word tantra often refers to a text, which may or may not be "tantric." Conversely, various tantric texts are actually not always called tantras (instead they may be called āgama, jñāna, saṃhitā, siddhānta, vidyā).[84][174] There are also tantric Upanishads, which are late Upanishads as well as tantric Puranas (and Puranas influenced by tantric ideas).[175] Besides these types of texts, there are also various types of tantric "śāstras" (treatises) which may be "commentaries, digests, compilations, monographs, collections of hymns or of names of deities, and mantras and works on mantras." Though much of this vast body of tantric literature is in Sanskrit, others have also been written in Indian vernacular languages. As noted by Padoux, the largest portion of these tantric works are Shaiva texts.[176]

Tantric texts and practitioners ("tantrikas" and "tantrinis") are often contrasted with Vedic texts and those who practice Vedic religion ("Vaidikas"). This non-Vedic path was often termed Mantramarga ("The way of mantras") or Tantrasastra ("Tantra teaching"). One of the most well known comments on this dichotomy is Kulluka Bhatta's statement in his 15th-century commentary to the Manusmṛiti which states that revelation (sruti) is twofold – Vedic and Tantric.[174] Hindu tantric teachings are generally seen as revelations from a divine being (such as Śiva, or the Goddess) which are considered by tantrikas to be superior to the Vedas in leading beings to liberation. They are also considered to be more effective during the Kali Yuga, a time of much passion (kama). However, tantric thinkers like Abhinavagupta, while considering tantra as superior, do not totally reject Vedic teachings, and instead consider them valid on a lower level since they also derive from the same source, the supreme Godhead.[84][177]

There are various Hindu tantric traditions within Shaivism, Shaktism and Vaishnavism. [178] There are numerous tantric texts for these different traditions with different philosophical points of view, ranging from theistic dualism to absolute monism.[note 5] [179] According to David B. Gray, "one of the most important tropes in the history of the dissemination of tantric traditions is that of lineage, the transmission of teachings along an uninterrupted lineage, from master to disciple, the so-called guruparaṃparā." [84] These various traditions also differ among themselves on how heterodox and transgressive they are (vis a vis the Vedic tradition). Since tantric rituals became so widespread, certain forms of tantra were eventually accepted by many orthodox Vedic thinkers such as Jayanta Bhatta and Yamunacharya as long as they did not contradict Vedic teaching and social rules.[180] Tantric scriptures such as the Kali centered

Jayadrathayamala also state that tantrikas can follow the Vedic social rules out of convenience and for the benefit of their clan and guru.[181] However, not all Vedic thinkers accepted tantra. For example, Kumarila Bhatta wrote that one should have no contact with tantrikas nor speak to them.[182]

Śaiva Tantra is called the Mantramārga, and is often seen as being a separate teaching than the ascetic "Atimārga" tradition (which includes the Pāśupatas and Kāpālikas).[84] [183] There are various doctrines, textual classes and schools of Shaiva Tantra, which often overlap with the Shakta tradition in different ways.

The Śaiva Siddhānta tradition is the earliest Śaiva Tantra school and was characterized by public rituals performed by priests. Some of their texts, like the Nīśvāsātattvasaṃhitā have been dated to the fifth century.[84] Their scriptures (the Śaiva Agamas) and basic doctrines are also shared by the other traditions as a common Śaiva doctrine and many of their rites are also used in other schools of Shaiva Tantra.[183] The prescriptions and rituals of the Śaiva Siddhānta Agamas are generally followed by Śaiva temples in South India and they are mostly compatible with orthodox Brahmanism, lacking terrifying deities and animal sacrifice.[184]

The Mantrapīṭha tradition on the other hand, worships Svachchanda Bhairava, a terrifying form of Shiva also known as "Aghora" ("not fearsome"). This tradition promotes the Skull observance (Kapalavrata), that is, carrying a skull, a skull staff (khatavanga) and worshipping in cremation grounds.[185] One contemporary group of Kapalika ascetics are the Aghoris.

There are also various traditions who are classified as "Vidyāpīṭha". The texts of this tradition focus on worshipping goddesses known as Yoginīs or Ḍākinīs and include antinomian practices dealing with charnel grounds and sexuality.[84] These goddess centered traditions of the Śākta tantras are mostly of the "left" current (vamachara) and are thus considered more heterodox.[186]

There are various Vidyāpīṭha traditions, which focus on a bipolar, bisexual divinity that is equal parts male and female, Śaiva and Śākta.[84][186] The Yamalatantras worship Bhairava along with Kapalini, the goddess of the skull. The Goddess centered traditions are known as the Kulamārga (Path of the Clans), referring to the clans of the goddesses and their Shakti tantras, which may have been established around the 9th century. It includes sexual rituals, sanguinary practices, the ritual consumption of liquor and the importance of spirit possession. It includes various sub-traditions that developed in different regions of India, such as the Trika lineage (which worships a trio of deities: Parā, Parāparā, and Aparā), the tradition of the fierce goddess Guhyakālī, Krama tradition, focusing on the goddess Kālī, the Kubjikā cult, and the southern tradition which worships the beautiful goddess Kāmeśvarī or Tripurasundarī.[84][186]

During the 10th century, the syncretic nondual tradition of Kashmir Śaivism developed. According to Alexis Sanderson, this tradition arose out of the confrontation between the dualistic and more orthodox Śaiva Siddhānta and the nondual transgressive traditions of the Trika and Krama. According to David B. Gray, this school integrated elements from both of these traditions, "the end result was a nondualistic system in which the transgressive elements were internalized and hence rendered less offensive to the orthodox." [84]

The philosophers of Kashmir Śaivism, especially Abhinavagupta (c. 975–1025 ce) and his student Jayaratha, are some of the most influential philosophers who wrote on Hindu tantra.[187] These thinkers synthesized the various goddess and Śaiva lineages and philosophies into a comprehensive and influential religious system. According to David White, Abhinavagupta "sublimates, cosmeticizes, and semanticizes many of its practices into a type of meditative asceticism whose aim is to realize a transcendent subjectivity". [84] Thus, his work domesticated the radically antinomian practices of Vidyāpīṭha lineages into meditative exercises.[84]

In Nepal, the Sarvamnaya tantra system evolved as a tantrik tradition which drew upon the āmnāya system. Amnaya is often translated as 'transmission'. This system serves as the guiding source for the tradition of worship of deities that emanate from the five different aspects of Lord Śiva. At its core, the concept of Āmnāya revolves around the idea that Śiva, with his five faces, (referred to as Sadashiva), imparts the secret Tantric teachings to the goddess through her corresponding five emanations. Scholarly work on Sarvamnaya can be found in the article, "The transmission of all powers: Sarvāmnāya Śākta Tantra and the semiotics of power in Nepāla-maṇḍala" by Jeffrey S. Lidke.[188]

The last major Śaiva tantric tradition is that of the Nāth or "Split-Ear" Kānpaṭa tradition, which emerged in the 12th or 13th century. They produced various Haṭhayoga texts which draw on tantric yogas.[84][189]

While the Śākta traditions continued to develop in different ways, sometimes in a more popular and devotional direction, many of them retain various tantric elements today. The two most important and popular Śākta tantra traditions today are the Southern Kaula transmission, which focus on the beautiful goddess Śrī (śrīkula) or Lalitā Tripurasundarī and the Northern and Eastern transmission, focusing on the ferocious goddess Kālī (kālikula).[84] The southern transmission gave rise to the Śrī Vidyā tradition, an important tantric religion in South India. Though it takes much of its philosophical and doctrinal system from Kashmir Shaivism, it generally avoids the transgressive elements and is orthodox or "right handed". Bhaskararaya (18th century) is considered a key thinker of this tradition.[84][187] The Kālīkula tradition is particularly important in East and South India and Kālī remains a popular goddess in India, a focus of much devotion.[84]

Vaiṣṇava

The main Vaiṣṇava tradition that is associated with tantra is the Pañcharatra. This tradition produced a number of tantric texts including Lakshmi tantra, but most of the other tantras are lost. However, this sect does not identify itself as "tantric".[84] The worship and ritual of most of the Vaiṣṇava temples in South India follow this tradition, which is ritually similar to the Shaiva Siddhanta. According to Padoux, "from the doctrinal point of view, they are nearer to brahmanical orthodoxy (proudly asserted by some of their affiliates) and their mantras are indeed often Vedic."[190]

According to David B. Gray,

During the medieval period another tantric Vaiṣṇava tradition emerged in Bengal. Known as the Sahajiyā tradition, it flourished in Bengal around the 16th through 19th centuries. It taught that each individual is a divinity, embodying the divine couple Kṛṣṇa and his consort Rādhā. This tradition integrated earlier Hindu and Buddhist tantric practices within a Vaiṣṇava theological framework.[84]

There are various Buddhist tantric traditions with the goal of attaining Enlightenment which are called by different names such as Vajrayana, Secret Mantra, Mantrayana and so on.[191][note 6][192] The Indo-Tibetan Buddhist tradition has been dominant in Tibet and the Himalayan regions.[191] It first spread to Tibet in the 8th century and quickly rose to prominence.[84] The Tibetan Buddhist tantric teachings have recently been spread to the Western world by the Tibetan diaspora. Nepalese Newar Buddhism meanwhile is still practiced in the Kathmandu Valley by the Newar people. The tradition maintains a canon of Sanskrit texts, the only Buddhist tantric tradition to still do so.

Buddhist Tantric practices and texts which developed from the 5th to the 8th centuries were translated into Chinese and are preserved in the Chinese Buddhist canon as well as in the Dunhuang manuscripts.[191][193] Tantric materials involving the use of mantras and dharanis began to appear in China during the fifth century period, and Buddhist masters such as Zhiyi developed proto-tantric rituals based on esoteric texts. [194] Chinese Esoteric Buddhism became especially influential in China in the Tang dynasty period with the arrival of esoteric masters such as Vajrabodhi and Amoghavajra to the capital city of Chang'an.[195] The succeeding Song dynasty saw an influx of new esoteric texts being transmitted by monks from Central Asia.[196] Chinese Esoteric Buddhist rituals were also noted to be particularly popular in the Liao dynasty, which contended with the Song for control of northern China.[197] Due to the highly eclectic nature of Chinese Buddhism where sectarian denominations were not strictly drawn between the various Buddhist schools (even during the Tang dynasty), and where most Buddhist masters mixed practices from the different traditions, Chinese Esoteric Buddhist practices were absorbed by lineages from the other Buddhist traditions such as Chan and Tiantai.[198][199] For example, the Northern School of Chan even became known for its esoteric practices of dhāraṇīs and mantras.[200] During the Yuan and Ming dynasty periods, certain esoteric elements from Tibetan Buddhism were also adapted and incorporated into general Chinese Buddhist practices and rituals. In modern Chinese Buddhism, the esoteric traditions continue to be passed on and practiced through numerous tantric rituals such as the Shuilu Fahui ceremony and the Yujia Yankou rite, which involve practices like deity yoga and mandala offerings, as well as the recitation of tantric mantras such as the Cundī Dhāraṇī, the Hundred Syllable Mantra of Vajrasattva, the Mahācakravidyārāja Dhāraṇī and the Shurangama Mantra. [198][199] Esoteric practices also spread to Korea and to Japan, where it exists as an independent tradition called Shingon.[84]

Other religions

The Hindu and Buddhist Tantric traditions significantly influenced other religions such as Jainism, Sikhism, the Tibetan Bön tradition, Daoism, Shintō, Sufi Islam, and the Western New Age movement.[201][202][203]

In the Sikh literature, the ideas related to Shakti and goddess reverence attributed to

Guru Gobind Singh, particularly in the Dasam Granth, are related to tantra ideas found in Buddhism and Hinduism.[204]

The Jain worship methods, states Ellen Gough, were likely influenced by Shaktism ideas, and this is attested by the tantric diagrams of the Rishi-mandala where the Tirthankaras are portrayed.[205] The Tantric traditions within Jainism use verbal spells or mantra, and rituals that are believed to accrue merit for rebirth realms.[206]

Practices

One of the main elements of the Tantric literature is rituals.[207] Rather than one coherent system, Tantra is an accumulation of practices and ideas from different sources. As Samuel writes, the tantric traditions are "a confluence of a variety of different factors and components." These elements include: mandalas, mantras, internal sexual yogic practices, fierce male and female deities, cremation ground symbolism, as well as concepts from Indian Philosophy.[208]

André Padoux notes that there is no consensus among scholars as to which elements are characteristic for Tantra, nor is there any text that contains all those elements.[209] Also, most of those elements can also be found in non-Tantric traditions.[209] Because of the wide range of communities covered by the term, it is problematic to describe tantric practices definitively. However, there are sets of practices and elements which are shared by numerous tantric traditions, and thus a family resemblance relationship can be established among them.

Different scholars give different main features of tantra. For example, David N. Lorenzen writes that tantra shares various "shamanic and yogic" practices, worship of goddesses, association with specific schools like the Kaulas and Kapalikas, as well as tantric texts. [67] Christopher Wallis meanwhile, basing himself on the definition given the tantric scholar Rāmakaṇṭha, gives four main features of tantra: "1) concern with ritual modes of manipulation (of the environment or one's own awareness), 2) requirement for esoteric initiation (to receive access to the scriptural teachings and practices), 3) a twofold goal of practice: the soteriological and supramundane one of liberation (variously conceived) and/or the mundane one of extraordinary power over other beings and one's environment, and 4) the claim that these three are explicated in scriptures that are the word of God (āgama) or the Buddha (buddhavaṇana)."[210]

According to Anthony Tribe, a scholar of Buddhist Tantra, Tantra has the following defining features:[211]

Centrality of ritual, especially the worship of deities

Centrality of mantras

Visualisation of and identification with a deity

Need for initiation, esotericism and secrecy

Importance of a teacher (guru, acharya)

Ritual use of mandalas (maṇḍala)

Transgressive or antinomian acts

Revaluation of the body

Revaluation of the status and role of women

Analogical thinking (including microcosmic or macrocosmic correlation)

Revaluation of negative mental states

There are a wide array of Tantric techniques or spiritual practices (sadhana) such as:
[212]

Dakshina: Donation or gift to one's teacher

Diksha or Abhiseka: Initiation ritual which may include shaktipat

Ganachakra: A ritual feast during which a sacramental meal is offered

Guru yoga and Guru devotion (bhakti)

Mandalas and Yantras, symbolic diagrams of forces at work in the universe

Mantras: reciting syllables, words, and phrases

Mudras, or hand gestures

Nyasa, installing mantras on the body

Prāyaścitta - an expiation ritual performed if a puja has been performed wrongly

Puja (worship ritual) and other forms of bhakti

Ritual music and dance

Ritual purification (of idols, of one's body, etc.)

Ritual sacrifice, including animal sacrifice

Singing of hymns of praise (stava)

Sexual yoga: ritual sexual union (with an actual physical consort or an imagined deity)

The acquisition and use of siddhis or supernormal powers. Associated with vamaçhara ('left-hand path')

Use of taboo substances such as alcohol, cannabis, meat and other entheogens.

Visualization of deities and Identification these deities in meditation (deity yoga)

Vrata and Samaya: vows or pledges, sometimes to do ascetic practices like fasting

Yatra: pilgrimage, processions

Yoga, including breathing techniques (pranayama) and postures (asana), is employed to balance the energies in the body/mind.

Worship and ritual

Worship or puja in Hindu Tantra differs from Vedic forms somewhat. While in the Vedic practice of yajna there are no idols, shrines, and symbolic art, in tantra they are important means of worship.[213]

Rituals are particularly important in the dualistic Śaiva Siddhānta which according to Padoux "is typically characterized by an overabundance of rituals, which are necessarily accompanied by mantras. These rituals are not so much a succession of actions as a play of mentally visualized and experienced images, a situation common to all Tantric traditions, where rites, meditation, and yoga are exercises in creative identifying imagination." The theory behind these rituals is the idea that all humans have a fundamental impurity (mala) that binds them to rebirth. This impurity can be removed by ritual action (along with proper knowledge). The initial step in this path is the ritual of initiation (diksa), which opens the door to future liberation at death.[214]

In the non-dualistic and transgressive (or "left hand") traditions like the Kali cults and the Trika school, rituals and pujas can include certain left hand path elements that are not found in the more orthodox traditions. These transgressive elements include the use of skulls and other human bone implements (as part of the Kapalika vow), fierce deities like Bhairava, Kubjika and Kali which were used as part of meditative visualizations, ritual possession by the deities (avesa), sexual rites and offering the deity (as well as consuming) certain impure substances like meat, alcohol and sexual fluids.[215] Padoux explains the transgressive practices as follows:

On the ritual and mental plane, transgression was an essential trait by which the nondualistic Tantric traditions set themselves apart from other traditions – so much so that they used the term "nondualistic practice" (advaitacara) to refer to the Kaula transgressive practices as a rejection of the duality (dvaita) of pure and impure in brahmanical society. Let us also note that for the nondualistic Saiva systems, the Yoginis were not active merely in the world of spirits; they were also powers present in humans – mistresses of their senses, governing their affects, which acquired an intensity and super-natural dimension through this divinization. This led adepts to an identification of their individual consciousness with the infinite divine Consciousness, thus also helping them transcend the sexual plane.[216]

In both the Buddhist and Saiva contexts, the sexual practices are often seen as a way to expand one's consciousness through the use of bliss.[216]

There is also a fundamental philosophical disagreement between Śaiva Siddhānta and the non-dualistic schools like the Trika regarding ritual. In Śaiva Siddhānta, only ritual can do away with "innate impurities" (anavamala) that bind individual Selves, though the ritual must be performed with an understanding of their nature and purpose as well as with devotion. In the view of the Trika school (especially in the work of Abhinavagupta), only knowledge (jñāna) which is a "recognition" (pratyabhijñā) of our true nature, leads to liberation. According to Padoux, "this is also, with nuances, the position of the Pīcaratra and of other Vaisnava Tantric traditions." [217]

Yoga, mantra, meditation

Tantric yoga is first and foremost an embodied practice, which is seen as having a divine esoteric structure. As noted by Padoux, tantric yoga makes use of a "mystic physiology" which includes various psychosomatic elements known as the subtle body. This imaginary inner structure includes chakras ("wheels"), nadis ("channels"), and energies (like Kundalini, Chandali, different pranas and vital winds, etc.). The tantric body is also held to be a microcosmic reflection of the universe, and is thus seen as containing gods and goddesses.[218] According to Padoux, the "internalized image of the yogic body" is a fundamental element for nearly all meditative and tantric ritual practices.[219]

The use of mantras is one of the most common and widespread elements of tantric practice. They are used in rituals as well as during various meditative and yogic practices. Mantra recitation (japa) is often practiced along with nyasa ("depositing" the mantra), mudras ("seals", i.e. hand gestures) and complex visualizations involving divine symbols, mandalas and deities. Nyasa involves touching various parts of the body while reciting mantra, which is thought to connect the deity with the yogi's body and transform the body into that of the deity.[220]

Mantras are also often visualized as being located within the yogi's body as part of tantric meditations. For example, in the "Yogini Heart" tantra, a Śrī Vidyā text, the yogi is instructed to imagine the five syllables (HA SA KA LA HRIM) of the deity's mantra in the muladhara chakra. The next set of five syllables (HA SA KA HA LA HRIM) is visualized in the heart chakra and the third cluster (SA KA LA HRIM) in the cakra between the eyebrows. The yogi is further instructed to lengthen the enunciation of the M sound at the end of the HRIM syllable, a practice called nada (phonic vibration). This practice goes through various increasingly subtle stages until it dissolves into the silence of the Absolute.[221]

Another common element found in tantric yoga is the use of visionary meditations in which tantrikas focus on a vision or image of the deity (or deities), and in some cases imagine themselves as being the deity and their own body as the body of the deity.[222] The practitioner may use visualizations, identifying with a deity to the degree that the aspirant becomes the Ishta-deva (or meditational deity). In other meditations, the deities are visualized as being inside the tantrika's body. For example, in Abhinavagupta's Tantraloka (chapter 15), the Trika trinity of goddesses (Parā, Parāparā, and Aparā) are visualized on the ends of the three prongs of a trident (located above the head). The rest of the trident is imagined positioned along the central axis of the yogi's body, with the blazing corpse of Shiva visualized in the head.[223]

Mandalas and yantras

Yantra are mystical diagrams which are used in tantric meditation and ritual. They are usually associated with specific Hindu deities such as Shiva, Shakti, or Kali. Similarly, a puja may involve focusing on a yantra or mandala associated with a deity.[224]

According to David Gordon White, geometrical mandalas are a key element of Tantra. [225] They are used to represent numerous tantric ideas and concepts as well as used for meditative focus. Mandalas symbolically communicate the correspondences between the "transcendent-yet-immanent" macrocosm and the microcosm of mundane human experience.[225] The godhead (or principal Buddha) is often depicted at the center of the mandala, while all other beings, including the practitioner, are located at various distances from this center.[225] Mandalas also reflected the medieval feudal system, with the king at its centre.[226]

Mandalas and Yantras may be depicted in various ways, on paintings, cloth, in three dimensional form, made out of colored sand or powders, etc. Tantric yoga also often involves the mental visualization of a mandala or yantra. This is usually combined with mantra recitation and other ritual actions as part of a tantric sadhana (practice).

Sex and eroticism

See also: Tantric sex

While tantra involves a wide range of ideas and practices which are not always of a sexual nature, Flood and Padoux both note that in the West, Tantra is most often thought of as a kind of ritualized sex or a spiritualized yogic sexuality.[227][228][229] According to Padoux, "this is a misunderstanding, for though the place of sex in Tantra is ideologically essential, it is not always so in action and ritual." Padoux further notes that while sexual practices do exist and were used by certain tantric groups, they "lost their prevalence when Tantra spread to other larger social groups." [229]

In the tantric traditions which do use sex as part of spiritual practice (this refers mainly to the Kaulas, and also Tibetan Buddhism), sex and desire are often seen as a means of transcendence that is used to reach the Absolute. Thus, sex and desire are not seen as ends in themselves. Because these practices transgress orthodox Hindu ideas of ritual purity, they have often given tantra a bad image in India, where it is often condemned by the orthodox. According to Padoux, even among the traditions which accept these practices, they are far from prominent and practiced only by a "few initiated and fully qualified adepts".[230]

Western scholarly research

The Sri Yantra (shown here in the three-dimensional projection known as Sri Meru or Maha Meru, used primarily by Srividya Shakta sects)

John Woodroffe

The first Western scholar to seriously study Tantra was John Woodroffe (1865–1936), who wrote about Tantra under the pen name Arthur Avalon and is known as the "founding father of Tantric studies".[231] Unlike previous Western scholars Woodroffe advocated for Tantra, defending and presenting it as an ethical and philosophical system in accord with the Vedas and Vedanta.[232] Woodroffe practised Tantra and, while trying to maintain scholastic objectivity, was a student of Hindu Tantra (the Shiva-Shakta tradition).[233][234][235]

Further development

Following Woodroffe, a number of scholars began investigating Tantric teachings, including scholars of comparative religion and Indology such as Agehananda Bharati, Mircea Eliade, Julius Evola, Carl Jung, Alexandra David-Néel, Giuseppe Tucci and Heinrich Zimmer.[236] According to Hugh Urban, Zimmer, Evola and Eliade viewed Tantra as "the culmination of all Indian thought: the most radical form of spirituality and the archaic heart of aboriginal India", regarding it as the ideal religion for the modern era. All three saw Tantra as "the most transgressive and violent path to the sacred".[237]

Golemancy is the magical art or science of creating and animating golems, which are artificial beings made from inorganic materials like stone, metal, or clay, often to perform tasks, fight, or automate labor in fantasy settings, particularly popular in games like Thaumcraft and Dungeons & Dragons. It involves building the golem's body from components and then imbuing it with life, purpose, or a captured soul, allowing for customizable creations with unique abilities and roles, from simple carriers to powerful guardians.

Key Aspects of Golemancy

Construction: Golems are built from raw materials (e.g., clay, stone, iron) and specialized parts like heads, arms, and cores, often using crafting stations or presses.

Animation: Life is granted through magic, sometimes requiring mana, souls, or specific runes to activate, giving them consciousness or programmed directives.

Customization: Players/users can add upgrades (elemental, accessory) or modules to enhance their golem's stats (strength, armor) and functions (combat, gathering, carrying).

Purpose: Golems serve various roles:

Workers: Mining, building, carrying items.

Guardians: Fighting enemies, protecting areas.

Utility: Transporting, sorting items.

In-Game Examples:

Thaumcraft (Minecraft): Focuses on crafting golems with basic and advanced cores for automation, requiring research and specific components.

Dungeons & Dragons (5e) (Homebrew): Offers extensive crafting systems where casters use spell slots to power highly customizable golems, sometimes piloted by humanoids.

Minecraft Mods (Fabric): Allow capturing mob souls to create specialized golem servants with unique abilities.

In essence, golemancy is a magic system centered on artificial life, offering players deep control over creating magical servants and machines.

Golemancy is the magical art or science of creating and animating golems, which are artificial beings made from inorganic materials like stone, metal, or clay, often to perform tasks, fight, or automate labor in fantasy settings, particularly popular in games like Thaumcraft and Dungeons & Dragons. It involves building the golem's body from components and then imbuing it with life, purpose, or a captured soul, allowing for customizable creations with unique abilities and roles, from simple carriers to powerful guardians.

Key Aspects of Golemancy

Construction: Golems are built from raw materials (e.g., clay, stone, iron) and specialized parts like heads, arms, and cores, often using crafting stations or presses.

Animation: Life is granted through magic, sometimes requiring mana, souls, or specific runes to activate, giving them consciousness or programmed directives.

Customization: Players/users can add upgrades (elemental, accessory) or modules to enhance their golem's stats (strength, armor) and functions (combat, gathering, carrying).

Purpose: Golems serve various roles:

Workers: Mining, building, carrying items.

Guardians: Fighting enemies, protecting areas.

Utility: Transporting, sorting items.

In-Game Examples:

Thaumcraft (Minecraft): Focuses on crafting golems with basic and advanced cores for automation, requiring research and specific components.

Dungeons & Dragons (5e) (Homebrew): Offers extensive crafting systems where casters use spell slots to power highly customizable golems, sometimes piloted by humanoids.

Minecraft Mods (Fabric): Allow capturing mob souls to create specialized golem servants with unique abilities.

In essence, golemancy is a magic system centered on artificial life, offering players deep control over creating magical servants and machines.

If you keep worrying during wudu (ablution) with thoughts like “Did I leave a dry spot?”, “Did I make my intention?”, or “Should I start over?”, don’t worry, you’re not alone. This is waswasa. Remember, Islam is a religion of ease. It offers solutions for everything, and actions are based on certainty, not doubt. ➡ So what should you do? Start with determination: Say Bismillah and promise yourself to perform wudu normally just once. ➡ Ignore the doubts: If you are sure you washed an area, do not listen to the thought that says, “Maybe it’s dry.” Without clear evidence, your wudu is valid. ➡ Do not waste water: Washing the same area repeatedly only strengthens the waswasa. ➡ Do not give it attention: Waswasa grows when you feed it. If you ignore it, it fades with time. The whispers of Shaytan come to make you undo what you have done. Just do not pay attention to them. Make your wudu normally and follow certainty, not doubt. Focus on your wudu, not the whispers. With Allah’s p Shivarahasya Purana (Sanskrit: शिवरहस्यपुराणम्; śiva rahasya purāṇa) is one of the 'Shaiva Upapuranas' or ancillary Purana regarding Shiva and Shaivite worship and is also considered 'Indian epic poetry' (Itihāsa).

Content

The book is dedicated to detailed explanation of Shaivite thoughts, rituals and religious myths. The book consists of twelve parts and has about one hundred thousand verses.

[1]

Ribhu Gita

Murti of Sage Ribhu with his enlightened disciple Nidagha sitting on his right at the SAT Temple (Society of Abidance in Truth)

Stone carving of Sage Ribhu instructing Nidagha on the wall of Sri Sadisvara Mandiram[2] in the SAT Temple

The Ribhu Gita (Sanskrit: ऋभुगीता; ṛbhugītā) is an acclaimed song at the heart of this purana whose content has been described as advaita, monist or nondual. The Ribhu Gita forms the sixth part of Shivarahasya Purana. It is one of the few works attributed to the Hindu sage Ribhu. In the span of about two thousand verses, it recounts the dialogue between sage Ribhu and sage Nidagha concerning the Ātman and Brahman, which takes place on the slopes of Mount Kedara in the Himalayas.[3]

Dialogues between Ribhu and Nidagha on the Supreme Brahman are presented elsewhere, such as in the Tejobindu Upanishad of Krishna Yajurveda, the Mahopanishad of Sama Veda, the Annapoornopanisha of Atharva Veda and the Varahopanish of Krishna Yajurveda.[1]

The Ribhu Gita uses negation (neti neti) and affirmation, reinforced by frequent repetition and exhaustive elaboration, to discuss the nature of reality under various headings. These include:[3]

Existence-Awareness-Self

Shiva is equated with Sat-Chit-Ananda, described as the screen on which Shakti is projected as the moving picture of the universe.

Jivanmukta - one who is liberated while still physically alive, who abides in the blissful peace of Sat-Chit-Ananda.

Videhamukta - one who is liberated after death through the continued repetition of "I am Self-Brahman."

Tamil translation

The Brahmin Vedic scholar Bikshu Sastrigal translated the work under the name of Ulaganatha Swamigal. The Tamil version is a free translation of the original Sanskrit text and consists of 1,964 verses.[3] This Tamil translation is published by Sri Ramanasramam, Tiruvannamalai, Tamil Nadu, India.

English translation

In 1984, "The Essence of Ribhu Gita", the English abridgement of the work by Professor N.R. Krishnamoorthi Aiyer, including selected passages made familiar by Sri Ramana, was published by Sri Ramanasramam. Professor N.R. Krishnamoorthi Aiyer, was encouraged by Sri Ramana to study the Ribhu Gita as his sadhana. The book consists of 122 verses from the original Tamil work conveying the essence of the original, and not as a word for word translation.[3]

In 1994, "The Ribhu Gita" was published by the Society of Abidance in Truth. It is a complete English translation of the entire text. The translation was done Dr. H. Ramamoorthy and assisted by Nome. This book takes the approach to convey the profound spiritual teaching while maintaining the translation as literal as possible.[1]

In 2000, "The Song of Ribhu" was published by the Society of Abidance in Truth. It is a complete English translation of the Tamil Ribhu Gita. The translation was done Dr. H. Ramamoorthy and Nome.[4]

History

The manuscripts are found in various ancient literature. However, to date there has been no critical study of these manuscripts.[5]

Published editions

The Kannada translation of the book was published in 30 volumes in 1950.[5]

"Higher Teaching") is the third basket of the Pali Canon in Theravada Buddhism, offering a profound, analytical philosophy and psychology that systematically categorizes ultimate realities like consciousness, mental factors, and matter, providing a detailed framework for understanding the mind and achieving liberation (Nibbana). It goes beyond the Sutta Pitaka's conventional teachings to dissect experience into its fundamental components, explaining the impermanent, conditional nature of existence to support insight (Vipassanā) practice. Key Aspects Higher Teaching: "Abhi" means "higher" or "transcending," making it the "Higher Dhamma" or "Further Truths," dealing with ultimate reality rather than conventional descriptions.Systematic Analysis: It provides a detailed, technical analysis of mind (consciousness) and matter (physical phenomena).Part of the Tripitaka: It's the third section of the "Three Baskets," alongside the Vinaya (monastic rules) and Sutta (discourses).Focus on Ultimate Reality: Explores the "dhammas" (phenomena) that constitute existence, including the three poisons (greed, hatred, delusion) and wholesome states.Purpose: To clarify the nature of experience, understand conditionality, prevent wrong views, and deepen insight into "not-self," ultimately leading to purification of the mind. Content & Structure Consists of seven books (treatises) in the Theravada tradition.Analyzes consciousness as rapid moments arising and passing away, conditioned by kamma and other factors.Classifies ultimate realities into four groups: consciousness, mental states, matter, and Nibbana. Significance Offers a deeper understanding of Buddhist doctrine and the path to liberation.While complex, its essence is practical: abstaining from evil, developing wholesome states, and purifying the mind. Try again later.AI Overview Abhidhamma means "higher doctrine" or "higher teachings" and refers to the scholastic and analytical part of the Buddhist canon, the third "basket" of the Pali Canon. It provides a systematic, philosophical, and psychological analysis of the Buddha's original teachings, detailing the nature of reality, mind, and consciousness through detailed classification and categorization. It is a collection of texts that are studied to understand the fundamental constituents of existence, the workings of the mind, and the conditions for liberation. Core aspects of Abhidhamma "Higher Doctrine": The term itself signifies a deeper, more nuanced understanding beyond the basic teachings found in the other sections of the canon. Systematic Analysis: It's a framework for analyzing Buddhist doctrine, rather than a collection of new rules. It uses specific technical terminology to classify and analyze concepts like mind, matter, and mental factors. "Basket" of Texts: The Abhidhamma is the third "basket" (\\(Tripitaka\\)) of the Buddhist scriptures. This collection of texts forms the "systematic philosophy" section of the canon. Focus on Mind and Reality: It delves into the fundamental nature of consciousness (\\(citta\\)), mental factors (\\(cetasika\\)), and material form (\\(rupa\\)), as well as the unconditioned state of liberation (\\(Nibbana\\)). Analytical Framework: It provides a map of the mind by breaking down experiences into their constituent parts to understand their causal

 The Wisdom Experience
 Answer: b
 Explanation: Sarvastivada, (“Doctrine That All Is Real”) is a school of early Buddhism. The Sarvastivada school is also known as the Vaibhashika because of the c. 2nd-century-CE commentary Mahavibhasha (“Great Elucidation”). This text itself was commented upon by the important 4th- or 5th-century Buddhist thinker Vasubandhu in his Abhidharmakosha, prior to his conversion to the Mahayana tradition of Buddhism. Thus, elements of the Sarvastivada school came to influence Mahayana thought. The Therīgāthā often translated as Verses of the Elder Nuns is a Buddhist scripture, a collection of short poems of early women who were elder nuns. The poems date from a three-hundred-year period, with some dated as early as the late 6th century BCE. In the Pāli Canon of Theravada Buddhism, the Therīgāthā is classified as part of the Khuddaka Nikāya, the collection of short books in the Sutta Piṭaka. It consists of 73 poems organized into 16 chapters. Yogachara is an influential school of Buddhist philosophy and psychology emphasizing phenomenology and ontology through the interior lens of meditative and yogic practices. It was associated with Indian Mahayana Buddhism in about the

The Sarvastivada school is also known as the Vaibhashika because of the c. 2nd-century-CEcommentary Mahavibhasha (“Great Elucidation”). This text itself was commented upon by the important 4th- or 5th-century Buddhist thinker Vasubandhu in his Abhidharmakosha, prior to his conversion to the Mahayana tradition of Buddhism. Thus, elements of the Sarvastivada school came to influence Mahayana thought. The Therigatha often translated as Verses of the Elder Nuns is a Buddhist scripture, a collection of short poems of early women who were elder nuns. The poems date from a three-hundred-year period, with some dated as early as the late 6th century BCE. In the Pāli Canon of Theravada Buddhism, the Therigatha is classified as part of the KhuddakaNikaya, the collection of short books in the Sutta Pitaka. It consists of 73 poems organized into 16 chapters. What are the basics of Abhidhamma? The four categories of dhammas in the Theravada Abhidhamma are: Citta (Mind, Consciousness, awareness) Cetasika (mental factors, mental events, associated mentality), there are 52 types. Rūpa — (physical occurrences, material form), 28 types. Nibbāna — (Extinction, cessation).

How does Abhidhamma define consciousness? In the Abhidhamma, citta means consciousness—the moment the mind becomes aware of something. It's the knowing aspect of the mind—whether that's a sight, a sound, a thought, or a feeling. Cetasika-s are mental factors that accompany citta (consciousness) and shape cognition based on its type.

Historically speaking the SP is considered the most authentic and authoritative source of the historical Buddha. But within Theravada the AP (Abhidhamma Pitaka) is considered very valuable and legitimate. Commentaries state that the Buddha taught it to the devas in heaven, and then relayed some of those teachings to the foremost disciple Sariputta who then taught it to the monks. The Suttas often talk about people, events, incidents and valuable lessons, the Abhidhamma is more low-level focused on causality: the self as aggregates, dependent origination, the sequences of events arising within the mind, etc..20+ comments · Oct 9, 2025r/theravadaRedditAbhidhamma Divas celebrated to deepen understanding of Buddhist Thought

In Numbers 22-24, Balak, the king of Moab, hired the the foreign prophet Balaam to curse Israel. He hated the nation. But it could not be done. Each time Balaam went to curse Israel, blessings would come from the seer's mouth. This enraged King Balak. He tried three times. He even changed Balaam's physical positioning to try and affect the results. "Then Balak said to him, 'Please come with me to another place from which you may see them; you shall see only the outer part of them, and shall not see them all; curse them for me from there.' So he brought him to the field of Zophim." Numbers 23:13-14a The king tried to skew Balaam's prophecies of Israel by making Israel look unfavorable, diminished. He thought, "Perhaps, if I can make Israel look un-blessed, the curse will hold." In this, the of Moab who was being influenced by the enemy, revealed a demonic strategy. "Make Israel look cursed. Diminish Israel before the nations in an attempt to discredit her, strip her of the bl Whom God has blessed, no one can curse.” Numbers 23 records Balaam’s attempts to curse Israel, paid and pressured by Balak. But every time Balaam opens his mouth, God turns the curse into a blessing. This chapter reveals a powerful truth: When God is for you, no enemy’s plan can stand against you. Also teaches some of the strongest truths about God’s protection and faithfulness: • Enemies cannot reverse God’s blessing • No curse, spell, or evil scheme can touch God’s people • God’s word stands firm — He does not change • Israel is protected because God is with them • Balaam saw truth but refused surrender — a warning to us • God overrules evil intentions and turns them into blessings This chapter is a powerful message: What God has blessed, no one can curse. And when God speaks blessing over your life, No enemy, no fear, and no circumstance can undo it. Share this with someone who needs today’s message . . . . . #BibleStudy #DailyScripture #Faith

Balaam and the angel, painting from Gustav Jaeger, 1836

Balaam (/ˈbeɪlæm/;<sup>[1]</sup> Hebrew: בִּלְעָם, romanized: Bīlʿām; Old Aramaic: 𐤁𐤏𐤍𐤁𐤏, romanized: Bilʿām<sup>[2]</sup>), son of Beor,<sup>[3]</sup> was, according to the Bible, a non-Israelite prophet and diviner who lived in Pethor, a place identified with the ancient city of Pitru, thought to have been located between the region of Iraq and northern Syria in what is now southeastern Turkey.<sup>[4]</sup>:166 According to chapters 22–24<sup>[5]</sup> of the Book of Numbers, he was hired by King Balak of Moab to curse Israel, but instead he blessed the Israelites, as dictated by God. Subsequently, the plan to entice the Israelites into idol worship and sexual immorality<sup>[6]</sup> is attributed to him.<sup>[7]</sup> Balaam is also mentioned in the Book of Micah, the Book of 2nd Peter and in the Book of Jude.

In rabbinic literature, Balaam is portrayed as a non-Israelite prophet with powers comparable to Moses but is often depicted negatively for his attempts to curse Israel, his role in leading them to sin, and his eventual execution. The Talmud emphasizes his importance by stating that Moses authored not only the Torah but also the section relating to Balaam (Bava Batra 14b).

In Josephus, Philo, and Christian sources, Balaam is recognized for his exceptional divinatory abilities but is criticized for his moral failings, including greed and corruption. The New Testament portrays Balaam as a symbol of greed, particularly in Revelation 2:14, which accuses him of instructing Balak to lead the Israelites into sin by encouraging idolatry and sexual immorality. Islamic tradition does not mention Balaam by name in the Quran but identifies him with the figure in Surah Al-A'raf 7:175–176, who received divine knowledge but succumbed to worldly desires, leading to his downfall and depiction as a panting dog.

The Deir Alla inscription, dating to around 840–760 BC, describes visions of Balaam, son of Beor, and portrays him as receiving messages from multiple deities rather than Yahweh, making it potentially the earliest extra-biblical reference to a biblical figure and the oldest known West Semitic alphabetic text.[8]

Hebrew Tanakh

The main story of Balaam occurs during the sojourn of the Israelites in the plains of Moab, east of the Jordan River, at the close of forty years of wandering, shortly before the death of Moses and the crossing of the Jordan. The Israelites have already defeated two kings in Transjordan: Sihon, king of the Amorites, and Og, king of Bashan. Balak, king of Moab,[9] consequently becomes alarmed and sends elders of Midian and his Moabite messengers,[10] to Balaam, son of Beor, to induce him to come and curse Israel. Balaam's location, Pethor, which is now located in the region of northern Syria and southeastern Turkey is simply given as "which is by the river of the land of the children of his people" in the Masoretic Text and the Septuagint. The Samaritan Pentateuch, Vulgate, and Peshitta all identify his land as Ammon.

Balaam and the angel Nuremberg Chronicle (1493)

The Prophet Balaam and the Angel by John Linnell (1859)

Balaam sends back word that he can only do what YHWH commands, and God has, via a nocturnal dream, told him not to go. Balak consequently sends higher-ranking priests and offers Balaam honours; Balaam continues to press God, and God finally permits him to go but with instructions to say only what He commands. Balaam then sets out in the morning with the princes of Moab. God becomes angry that he went and sends the Angel of the Lord (Numbers 22:22) to prevent him. At first, the angel is seen only by the donkey Balaam is riding, which tries to avoid the angel. After Balaam starts punishing the donkey for refusing to move, it is miraculously given the power to speak to Balaam (Numbers 22:28) and says, "What have I done to you, that you have struck me these three times?" At this point, Balaam is allowed to see the angel, who informs him that the donkey's turning away from the messenger is the only reason the angel did not kill Balaam. Balaam immediately repents, but is told to go on.

Balak meets with Balaam at Kirjat Huzoth, and they go to Bamoth-Baal (the "high places of Baal"), and offer sacrifices on seven altars, leading to Balaam being given a prophecy by Yahweh, which He speaks to Balak. However, the prophecy blesses Israel; Balak remonstrates, but Balaam reminds him that he can only speak the words put in his mouth, so Balak takes him to another "high place" at Pisgah, to try again. Building another seven altars here, and making sacrifices on each, Balaam provides another prophecy blessing Israel.

Balaam finally gets taken by a now very frustrated Balak to Peor, and, after the seven sacrifices there, decides not to "seek enchantments" but instead looks upon the Israelites from the peak. The Spirit of God comes upon Balaam and he delivers a third positive prophecy concerning Israel. Balak's anger rises to the point where he threatens Balaam, but Balaam merely offers a prediction of fate. Balaam then looks upon the Kenites, and Amalekites and offers two more predictions of their fates. Balak and Balaam then go to their respective homes.

Later, Numbers 25:1–9 describes how Israel engaged in the Heresy of Peor. Numbers 31:16 blames this on Balaam's advice and because of his culpability in the incident, which resulted in deadly divine judgements against the Israelites who participated, he was eventually killed in a retaliatory battle against Midian in Numbers 31:8.

Deuteronomy 23:3–6 summarises these incidents, and further states that the Ammonites were associated with the Moabites. Joshua, in his farewell speech, also makes reference to it. With God's protection taken from him, Balaam is later listed among the Midianites who were killed in revenge for the "matter of Peor". Joshua 13:22 records that Balaam died "by the sword" during a battle for the Reubenite occupation of Midianite land.

Balaam and the Ass, by Rembrandt van Rijn, 1626

In total, Balaam's prophecies consist of seven (Hebrew) poems:

The first, Numbers 23:7–10, prophesies the unique exaltation of the Kingdom of Israel, and its countless numbers.

The second, Numbers 23:18–24, celebrates the moral virtue of Israel, its monarchy, and its military conquests.

The third, Numbers 24:3–9, celebrates the glory and conquests of Israel's monarchy.

The fourth, Numbers 24:14–19, prophesies the coming of a king who will conquer Edom and Moab.

The fifth, Numbers 24:20, concerns the ruins of Amalek.

The sixth, Numbers 24:21–22, concerns the destruction of the Kenites by Assyria.

The seventh, Numbers 24:23–24, concerns "ships of Kittim" coming from the west to attack Assyria and Eber.

The poems fall into three groups. The first group consists of two poems which characteristically start immediately. The third group of three poems also start immediately, but are much shorter. The second group, however, consists of two poems which both start:

Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man whose eyes are open hath said: He hath said, which heard the words of God, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open ...

Biblical criticism

Of Balaam's three groups of poems, the documentary hypothesis argued that the first and third groups originated within the Elohist text, whereas the second group belonged to the Jahwist. Thus the Elohist describes Balaam giving two blessings, making sacrifices on seven altars, at the high places of Baal, before each, then deciding not to "seek enchantments" after the third set of sacrifices, but to "set his face upon the wilderness," which Balak views as a third blessing, and so Balaam then gives the three final predictions of fate. Conversely, in the Jahwist source, Balaam arrives, the spirit of God comes upon him, and he delivers a blessing and a prophecy in succession.

Agag, mentioned in the third poem, is described as a great king, which does not correspond to the king of the Amalekites who was named Agag, and described in 1 Samuel 15, since that description considers Amalek to be small and obscure. While the Masoretic Text of the poem uses the word Agag, the Septuagint, other Greek versions, and the Samaritan Pentateuch all have Gog. These names are consequently considered textual corruptions, and Og has been suggested as the original.

The final three poems do not refer to Israel or Moab and are thus considered unusual since they seem to have little relevance to the narrative. It is thought that they may have been added to bring the number of poems up to five if inserted into the Elohist source or up to seven if only inserted once JE was constructed. While the sixth poem refers to Assyria, it is uncertain whether it is a historical reference to ancient Nineveh or a prophecy, which some religious commentators consider refers to the Seleucid Empire, which also took the name "Assyria". The seventh is also ambiguous and may either be a reference to the Sea Peoples or, in the view of some religious commentators, to the conquest of the Achaemenid Empire by Alexander the Great.

In the view of some schools of textual criticism,[11] the narrative, excepting the episode involving the donkey, is simply a framework invented to be able to insert much older poems.

Deir Alla inscription

Drawing of fragments of the Deir Alla inscription

Further information: Deir Alla Inscription

In 1967, at Deir Alla, Jordan, archaeologists found an inscription with a story relating visions of the seer of the gods Bala'am, son of Be'or, the same name appearing as that of a prophet in the Bible. In both the inscription and the Bible, Balaam is a prophet whose utterances determine the fate of nations. However, other details of the stories are different.[4] According to the inscription,[12] Balaam wakes up weeping and tells his people that the gods appeared to him in the night telling him about a goddess threatening to destroy the land. She is to cover the sky and reduce the world to complete darkness. In contrast with the biblical account where Balaam receives prophecies from Yahweh, the inscription associates Balaam with multiple deities (Ashtar, a god named Shgr, and Shadday gods and goddesses).[4] If this inscription refers to Balaam mentioned in the Book of Numbers, Balaam is the earliest biblical figure identified in extra-biblical source.

The Oxford Handbook of Biblical Studies describes it as "the oldest example of a book in a West Semitic language written with the alphabet, and the oldest piece of Aramaic literature." [13] The inscription is datable to ca. 840–760 BCE; it was painted in red and black inks, apparently to emphasize the text, on fragments of a plastered wall: 119 pieces of inked plaster were recovered. Meindert Dijkstra suggests that "the reticence of OT scholarship to take account of the text may be attributable to its damaged state, the difficulty of reconstructing and reading it, and the many questions it raises of script, language, literary form and religious content." [14]

In rabbinic literature

בלעם בן בעור - Artwork by esoteric artist Filippo Biagioli

In rabbinic literature Balaam is represented as one of seven non-Israelite prophets; the other six being Beor (Balaam's father), Job, and Job's four friends. [15] In this literature, Balaam gradually acquired a position among the non-Jews, which was exalted as much as that of Moses among the Jews; [16] at first being a mere interpreter of dreams, but later becoming a magician, until finally the spirit of prophecy descended upon him. [17]

According to a negative view of Balaam in the Talmud, Balaam possessed the gift of being able to ascertain the exact moment during which God is angry—a gift bestowed upon no other creature. Balaam's intention was to curse the Israelites at this moment of wrath, and thus cause God himself to destroy them; but God purposely restrained His anger in order to baffle the wicked prophet and to save the nation from extermination. [18] The Talmud also recounts a more positive view of Balaam, stating that when the Torah was given to Israel, a mighty voice shook the foundations of the earth, so much so that all kings trembled, and in their consternation turned to Balaam, inquiring whether this upheaval of nature portended a second deluge; the prophet assured them that what they heard was the voice of God, giving the sacred law to the Israelites. [19]

According to Jewish legend, Balaam was made this powerful in order to prevent the non-Jewish tribes from saying: "If we had only had our own Moses, we would be as pious as the Jews." Balaam is included in the list of persons born circumcised along with Moses.

In rabbinical literature the epithet rasha, translating as the wicked one, is often attached to the name of Balaam. [20] Balaam is pictured as blind in one eye and lame in one foot, [21] and his disciples (followers) are distinguished by three morally corrupt qualities: an evil eye, a haughty bearing, and a greedy spirit. [22]

Due to his behavior with the Midianites, the Rabbis interpret Balaam as responsible for the behavior during the Heresy of Peor, which they consider to have been unchastity, and consequently the death of 24,000 victims of the plague which God sent as punishment. When Balaam saw that he could not curse the children of Israel, the Rabbis assert that he advised Balak, as a last resort, to tempt the Hebrew nation to immoral acts and, through these, to the worship of Baal-peor. The God of the Hebrews, adds Balaam, hates lewdness; and severe chastisement must follow.[23]

The Rabbis, playing on the name Balaam, call him "Belo 'Am" (without people; that is, without a share with the people in the world to come), or "Billa' 'Am" (one that ruined a people); and this hostility against his memory finds its climax in the dictum that whenever one discovers a feature of wickedness or disgrace in his life, one should preach about it.[24] In the process of killing Balaam (Numbers 31:8), all four legal methods of execution—stoning, burning, decapitating, and strangling—were employed. [24] He met his death at the age of 33,[24] and it is stated that he had no portion in the world to come.[25] The book devotes a special section to the history of the prophet discussing why God has taken away the power of prophecy from the Gentiles.[26] The Talmud states that "Moses wrote his book and the portion of Balaam", [27] regarding this passage as separate from the rest of the Torah in terms of topic or style, but united in authorship.

Some have suggested that in Sanhedrin 106b and Gittin 57a Balaam may be likened to Jesus.[28][29][30][31] Balaam's father Beor was a son of Laban.[32] The Book of Jasher reports that Balaam's sons were Jannes and Jambres.[33]

Balaam's exclamation, "How good are your tents, O Jacob, your tabernacles, O Israel!", was taken by later generations of Jews as the basis of the liturgical prayer Ma Tovu.[34]

In Josephus, Philo, and Christian sources

Balaam is mentioned in several places in the New Testament,[35] where he is cited as a type of avarice; for example in the Book of Revelation 2:14 describes false teachers at Pergamum who held the "teaching of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication". Balaam has attracted much interest, alike from Jews, Christians, and Muslims. Josephus paraphrases the story more so, and speaks of Balaam as the best prophet of his time, but with a disposition ill-adapted to resist temptation.[36] Philo describes him as a great magician in the Life of Moses;[37] elsewhere he speaks of "the sophist Balaam, being," i.e. symbolizing "a vain crowd of contrary and warring opinions" and again as "a vain people", both phrases being based on a mistaken etymology of the name Balaam.

A man also named Balaam also figures as an example of a false prophet motivated by greed or avarice in both 2 Peter 2:15 and in Jude 1:11. This Balaam is listed as the son of Bezer, which is usually identified as Beor.[38][39][40][41] Some authors claim that Bezer was the Aramaic pronunciation of Beor,[40] while others hold that the author was attempting to play off the Hebrew word basar or "flesh" to insult Balaam. Later Jewish tradition similarly played with Balaam's name to call him corrupt and imply bestiality. Still other authors hold that Bezer and Beor are distinct, while still identifying the Balaams of the Old and New Testaments, claiming that Beor is Balaam's father and Bezer is

Balaam's home town.[41]

The story is also referred to in chapter 10 of 2 Meqabyan, a book considered canonical in the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church.[42]

In his commentary on Matthew's Gospel, Dale Allison associates the magi who visited the infant Jesus (Matthew 2) with Balaam, in that both Balaam and the magi were "from the east": thus "Matthew's magi are Balaam's successors".[43]

No clear reference is made to Balaam in the Qur'an. However, the commentators argue that he is the one to whom the following text is referring:

And relate to them 'O Prophet' the story of the one to whom We gave Our signs, but he abandoned them, so Satan took hold of him, and he became a deviant.

If We had willed, We would have elevated him with Our signs, but he clung to this life—following his evil desires. His example is that of a dog: if you chase it away, it pants, and if you leave it, it 'still' pants. This is the example of the people who deny Our signs. So narrate 'to them' stories 'of the past', so perhaps they will reflect.

—Surah Al-A'raf 7:175–176[44]

The Muslim commentators explain that Bal'am bin Ba'ura (Arabic: بلعام بن باعوراء) was a Canaanite who had been given knowledge of some of the books of God. His people asked him to curse Moses (Musa) and those who were with him, but he said, "How can I curse one who has angels with him?" They continued to press him, however, until he cursed the Israelites, and, as a consequence, they remained 40 years in the Wilderness of the Wanderings. Then, when he had cursed Moses, his tongue came out and fell upon his breast, and he began to pant like a dog.[45][46]

The story as told by Tabari[47] is somewhat more Biblical. Balaam had the knowledge of the Most Sacred Name of God, and whatever he asked of God was granted to him. The story of Balaam and the ass, then follows at length. When it came to the actual cursing, God "turned his tongue" so that the cursing fell upon his own people and the blessing upon Israel. Then his tongue came out and hung down on his breast. Finally, he advised his people to adorn and beautify their women and to send them out to ensnare the Israelites. The story of the plague at Baal-peor and of Cozbi and Zimri[48] follows.

According to another story which al-Tabari gives, Balaam was a renegade Israelite who knew the Most Sacred Name, and to gain the things of this world, went over to the Canaanites. Al-Tha'labi[49] adds that Balaam was descended from Lot. He gives, too, the story of Balaam's dream, his being forbidden by God to curse Israel. Another version is that Balak, the king of Bal'a, compelled Balaam to use the Most Sacred Name against Israel. The curse fell automatically, and Moses, having learned whence it came, entreated God to take from Balaam his knowledge of the Name and his faith. This being done, they went out from him in the form of a white dove.

The Baghdadi historian Al Masudi said in his book Meadows of Gold and Mines of Gems that Balaam ben Beor was in a village in the lands of Shem (Canaan), and he is the son of Baura(Beor) ben Sanur ben Waseem ben Moab ben Lot ben Haran (PUT), and his prayers were answered, so his folks asked him to pray against Joshua ben Nun but he could not do it, so he advised some of the kings of the giants to show the pretty women and release them toward the camp of Joshua ben Nun, and so they did, and they (the Israelites) hurried up to the women and the plague spread among them and seventy thousand of them were dead.[50]

Not to be confused with Francoism.

For the ideology of the followers of the Croatian politician Josip Frank, see Frankists (Croatia).

Jacob Frank, 1895 depiction

Frankism is a Sabbatean religious movement originating in Rabbinic Judaism of the 18th and 19th centuries.[1] Created in Podolia, it was named after its founder, Jacob Frank.

Frank completely rejected Jewish norms, preaching to his followers that they were obligated to transgress moral boundaries, embracing antinomianism. The Frankists engaged in incest, orgies and sex rituals, such as the infamous 1756 incident in Lanškroun where they were allegedly caught dancing around a half-naked woman symbolizing the Shekhinah.[2][3]

At its height, Frankism claimed perhaps 50,000 followers, primarily Jews living in the Polish–Lithuanian Commonwealth, as well as in other regions of Central and Eastern Europe.[1][4][5] Later, Frankists were encouraged to convert en masse to Catholicism.[6][7]

Description

Frankists believed in Sabbatai Zevi, one of the most famous of all self-proclaimed messiahs in Jewish history. He believed in transgressing Jewish commandments to elevate the "divine sparks" constrained by them[dubious – discuss]. He performed actions that violated traditional Jewish prohibitions, such as eating foods forbidden by kashrut, the Jewish dietary laws, and celebrating prescribed fast days as feast days.[8] He eventually opted to convert to Islam rather than face execution for claiming to be the messiah in Judaism. After Zevi's death, several branches of Sabbateanism evolved that disagreed over which aspects of Judaism should be preserved and discarded.[9]

Jacob Frank claimed to be a reincarnation of Sabbatai Zevi and followed and extended his practice of transgression. Father-daughter incest was commonly practised by his followers,[10] and orgies featured prominently in ritual.[4][5][11] Frank claimed that "all laws and teachings will fall", [12] and following antinomianism, asserted that the most important obligation of humanity was the transgression of every boundary.[11]

Organization

Jacob Frank stood at the head of Frankism. He regarded his followers as soldiers, and all were members of a company to build an army to secure Frank's rule over a Frankist country. There were four company locations: in Iwów, Częstochowa, Brno, and Offenbach am Main.[13] Members were required to wear plate armor, shields, and helmets and train hard.[14]

His teachings were not intended for the ears of all Frankists, but only for his personally selected, small circle of so-called "Brothers and Sisters", [15] of whom he demanded blind obedience.[16] Frank tried to maintain absolute control over at least this circle, taking advantage of their tendency to believe in shedim and magic. Within the circle of "Brothers and Sisters", Frank spoke directly only to the "Brothers"; according to his teachings, nothing could be done with women alone, since women had brought death into the world.[17]

Doctrine

"Words of the Lord"

The most important Frankist text is the Księga Słów Pańskich ("Book of the Words of the Lord"). This is written in Polish in elementary, almost folk language and consists of short sayings (some fewer than ten words), interpretations and parables, visions and dreams; longer speculations about the elements of the doctrine; various episodes from Frank's life, the Frankist "company" and contemporary rulers; and fairy-tale stories up to 1100 words long. To support them, there are mainly quotations from the Torah and the Zohar as well as popular stories from the surrounding culture, which were quoted verbatim or paraphrased or adapted to his own doctrine.[18] The text begins and ends with a vision: § 1 is Frank's vision of his calling; § 2192 is Frank's final testament to his "company". The Words of the Lord belongs to Jewish literature, but its contents reject Jewish tradition and teachings. Biblical figures such as Jacob, Esau and Esther are the foundations of Frank's teaching.[18]

Frank's "Brothers" compiled the work between 1755 and 1791 as a Zbiór (collection) of materials developed in numerous meetings. The original Polish title Księga (book) is therefore somewhat misleading and is only used once in the collection, in § 2192.[19] It was written down starting around 1773 and distributed exclusively in the handwritten form to his widely scattered followers.[20] The last known complete manuscript (Words of the Lord §§ 1–2192) was destroyed, along with numerous other Frankist sources, during the destruction of Warsaw in World War II. Until recently, all researchers of Frankism have relied on the source material of the extensive biography by the historian Aleksander Kraushar (pl; de), the most important study of Frankism from the pre-war period.[21]

The "V" doctrine

In Frankism, Frank is the third messianic incarnation of Tiferet after Sabbatai Zevi and Baruchiah Russo (de) (1677–1720), and also the reborn forefather Jacob. Nonetheless, he is only a "helper". The actual guide in Frankism is the Virgin, the incarnation of the Shekhinah and the female Messiah. Frankists are supposed to follow her bravely, like soldiers, through all horrors. The path by which Frank sought to lead his followers to "life" was symbolized by the letter "V", which also represents Jacob's ladder. The seeker must first climb into the abyss to reach the deepest level of humiliation and then climb back up to "life". According to Frankist doctrine, the patriarchs and Moses had already tried to follow the path but had failed, as had Zevi.

Frank proclaims that the Frankists' descent down the "V" ladder into the deepest humiliation is reflected in society's hatred and exclusion of them, which result from Frankism's consistent implementation of the idea that all laws and teachings of the world are only laws of the "Three Evil World Rulers" (the Pope, the Tsar, and the Sultan), and therefore do not need to be observed. In the best case, such laws and teachings need only be kept in pretense; religions and teachings of the world can be worn like an empty shell and then discarded at whim because the "true Torah" is yet to be revealed.[22] The Mosaic Law with its Ten Commandments should be despised, as it is part of the "old Torah". The contempt for all teaching of the world culminates in a statement by Frank to his close circle of "Brothers and Sisters" that amounts to a command for total assimilation: one should adapt to the respective religion or language depending on the country.[23] Frank also advises masked assimilation in the following passage:

Solomon was wise, wiser than all the peoples. He mixed with the nations, took the daughters of kings as his wives, but he did not get anything out of it. He could mix with the nations because he was a king. But here the whole world knows that I am descendant from Jews, that I am newly baptized and poor. But I have hope that I will mix with their society this winter, and they themselves will call me. I can tell you: whoever does not mix with the nations, all his work is in vain![24]

Frank was not interested in the acculturation of the Jews; rather, he wanted them to integrate into society in order to ultimately overthrow it.[25] If the enemies of the Jews in the 18th century had been familiar with Frank's secret sectarian canon, it would have made the already hotly contested Jewish emancipation considerably more difficult.[25]

The Virgin

The Frankist Virgin, Eve Frank (1774)

The center of Frankism was a new concept of the Shekhinah. However, the term was forbidden in Frankism because Jacob Frank referred to her as "the Virgin". The Shekhinah is a Kabbalistic term. Klaus Samuel Davidowicz, a Jewish studies scholar at the University of Vienna who has written extensively on Frank and Frankism, assumes it was initially an old name for God that referred to the indwelling or presence of God in a specific place.[26] According to Frank's teachings, all of the important forefathers—Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Moses—strove towards the Virgin, who manifested herself in different persons, such as Rachel, and all had failed.[27] Moses' liberation from Egypt could not have been complete either, since the foundation of salvation is the Virgin.[28] But now, according to Frank, the real Virgin had arrived, a female Messiah visible to all people: his daughter Eve Frank.[29] In a teaching, Frank identifies himself with the traditional Messiah ben Joseph,[30] who will have a significant impact but perish in the fight against the enemies of the end times. Just as he precedes the Messiah ben David, Frank prepares the way for the Virgin, his daughter.

Frankism characterizes the Virgin using elements of the Esther stories[31] and is strongly influenced by the veneration of Mary in the Catholic Church surrounding the Black Madonna of Częstochowa. He claimed that the Black Madonna would lead his followers to the Frankist Virgin and therefore presented baptism as a necessary step. Following the Bahir and the Zohar, in which the Shekhinah is described as being like a princess in a tower, Frank refers to an actual tower of the Jasna Góra Monastery where he was exiled.[32] He had miniature portraits of his daughter Eve made corresponding to Catholic images of Mary, mother of Jesus; these are now in the National Library of Israel. However, Eve, as Shekhinah, was an element that had not yet appeared during Frank's lifetime. The Virgin was hidden from Frank, and his task was to free her. The Black Madonna points to the true Virgin, who will be revealed preceding the final redemption.[33] Frank regarded himself as the Virgin's guide, who, before her manifestation, is in a "mysterious place"[34] and was given only to him since the beginning of the world, so that he, as her father, would be her guardian.[35] The soul of the Shekhinah was still with Frank; his "Brothers" were unworthy to see her themselves. They were supposed to support Frank in finding the Virgin. Depending on the company's behaviour, the Virgin would behave positively or negatively towards them, a well-known idea from the Kabbalistic descriptions of the Shekhinah. During her father's lifetime, Eve Frank held a special position within the "company": as soon as she was old enough, she stood at her father's side as a confidant and adjutant.[36] Frank repeatedly accused his followers of having fallen back into Judaism, thus preventing the liberation of the Virgin. [37] The only way to the Virgin is to adapt to the Polish environment.

The liberation of the Shekhinah—the transfer of the Shekhinah's soul from Jacob to Eve Frank—is also described in some longer fairy-tale-like narratives in the Words of the Lord, which are reminiscent of Middle Eastern models in the 1001 Nights. They use traditional Kabbalistic terminology, with the motif of concealment and disguise as a gardener being important in Frankism;[38] the garden stands for a symbolic setting of the world of the ten sefirot. The strengthening of the third Sephirah, Chokmah, the male principle (also known as the upper Shechinah), also leads to the liberation of the lower Shekhinah.[39] In Frank's perception of the Virgin, it is clear how deeply his ideas are rooted in Kabbalah and other Jewish writings, despite Christian influences[example needed]. The author(s) of the Words of the Lord who created such colorful parables and allegories required an excellent knowledge of Kabbalistic literature.[40]

Da'at, the mystical goal

Tree of Life: the Sephiroth

The last stage of the mystical path in Frankism is Da'at "cosmic cognizance".[41] In the Zohar as well as in Frankism, Da'at describes the mystical place where all ten sefirot are united. It is an apparent sefira,[42] which cosmologically means the "concealed knowledge" that creates a harmonizing union between two sefirot: the male principle of Chokmah and the female principle of Binah. It results from the fusion of these cosmic forces. On a physical level, "knowledge" means the sexual union of man and woman, which manifests itself in the union of Adam and Eve in Genesis 4:1. It is thus possible to reach Da'at through sexual intercourse. With the help of sexual rites, Jacob Frank wished to reach Da'at on earth, the last step of Jacob's ladder. This knowledge was a higher realization that would bring a deep insight into everything. It was enlightenment and a fresh realization in one. With it would be associated a new name and a new soul.

Frank emphasized that all the patriarchs, including Sabbatai Zevi, had been unable to enter Da'at because they had not been baptized. To be worthy of entering the Da'at, one must first reach the level of Esau, the acceptance of Catholicism.[43][44]

Frankism allowed all of its followers to take part in the mystical search for Da'at but demanded blind obedience to its leader,[45] combined with the complete abandonment of all laws and teachings, which, in any case, they only appeared to follow.[46] True to the motto: "The more blind and radical my obedience to my Lord, the more likely the possibility of reaching Da'at, after accepting Catholicism, the Frankists strove to complete the personal path to Da'at, which in the end would only be possible for a few select "Brothers and Sisters".[47]

The triangle or "V" of the ladder refers to the Trinity, but at the same time to the earthly path of the Frankists: by getting rid of all laws and teachings, they degraded themselves and incurred the contempt of society. The "V" is applied to Edom, Shekhinah, and Da'at, meaning the Frankists should be baptized to reach the cosmic Esau, or, at the tip of the "V", the Virgin, who will raise them from the depths of their exile, leading them back up to Da'at.[48] The beginning of the entry into Da'at will be seen on earth when the Frankists are integrated into non-Jewish society and accepted by the international community. Then, the mystical-cosmological path will continue.[49]

Scholarly analysis

Several authorities on Sabbateanism, such as Heinrich Graetz and Aleksander Kraushar (de; pl), were skeptical of the existence of a distinctive Frankist doctrine. According to Gershom Scholem, a 20th-century authority on Sabbateanism and Kabbalah, Kraushar described Frank's sayings as "grotesque, comical and incomprehensible". In his classic essay "Redemption Through Sin", Scholem placed Frankism as a later and more radical outgrowth of Sabbateanism.[9] In contrast, Jay Michaelson argues that Frankism was "an original theology that was innovative, if sinister" that was, in many respects, a departure from the earlier formulations of Sabbateanism. In traditional Sabbatean doctrine, Zevi (and often his followers) claimed to be able to liberate the sparks of holiness hidden within what seemed to be evil. According to Michaelson, Frank's theology asserted that the attempt to liberate the sparks of holiness was the problem, not the solution. Instead, Frank claimed that the "mixing" between holy and unholy was virtuous.[11]

Netanel Lederberg claims that Frank had a Gnostic philosophy wherein there was a true God whose existence was hidden by a demiurge. This "true God" could allegedly be revealed only through the destruction of the social and religious structures created by the demiurge, thus leading to a thorough antinomianism. For Frank, the distinction between good and evil is a product of a world governed by the "false God". Lederberg compares Frank's position to that of Friedrich Nietzsche.[50]

After Jacob Frank

After Jacob Frank's death in 1791, leadership of the Frankist movement passed to his daughter, Eve Frank (Ewa Frank), who had been proclaimed the "Holy Virgin" and a kind of messianic counterpart to her father as early as 1770. Frank had begun preparing her for spiritual leadership while still alive, referring to her in quasi-divine terms. She became a central symbolic figure in the cult's theology, which drew heavily on inversion, sexual ritual, and antinomian reinterpretation of Christian and Jewish symbols.

Eve maintained a court-like following in Offenbach, Germany, where the remaining Frankist elite had taken residence. They continued to act as a quasi-mystical sect, dressing in ornate ceremonial clothing, preserving a secretive hierarchical structure, and perpetuating doctrines inherited from Frank—particularly those related to the sacralization of transgression and the subversion of traditional religious laws. The group engaged in extensive networking with various European aristocratic and clerical circles, especially within the Habsburg court and Polish nobility, often leveraging secrecy and influence rather than overt proselytization.

By this time, the Frankist identity had largely detached from Judaism altogether. Most adherents had been baptized into Catholicism decades earlier, not out of theological conviction but as part of Jacob Frank's strategy to infiltrate and manipulate dominant power structures from within—a tactic central to his doctrine of "redemption through sin."

Eve Frank ruled over the community until her death in 1816. Afterward, the movement gradually disintegrated as a formal sect, but many of its ideological patterns persisted through intermarriage, elite networking, and secret societies. Scholars such as Gershom Scholem and Pawel Maciejko have suggested that Frankist descendants may have assimilated into Masonic and esoteric Christian networks.

Modern-day references to 'Frankism'

Although Frankism is often considered a historical footnote within Jewish messianic movements, references to it have re-emerged in contemporary political and cultural discourse.

While some references to Frankism have been labeled antisemitic tropes in academic and media sources, [51] There is growing scholarly and journalistic debate over whether conflating critique of Frankist ideology with antisemitism is intellectually sound. This is particularly relevant given the historical record: Jacob Frank and many of his followers ultimately converted to Catholicism, aligning themselves with European royal courts and secret societies rather than mainstream Jewish life. [52]

Some political commentators, such as Candace Owens, have described Frankism as "the preferred religion of the elites" and associated it with devil worship and modern-day inversion rituals. [53]

Some researchers argue that careful distinction should be made between Judaism as a religion and Frankism as a heretical, antinomian sect that deliberately broke with traditional Jewish law and identity. As a result, the emerging conversation increasingly focuses on theological inversion as a political technology, rather than as an ethnic or religious accusation.

AI Overview

Sabbatean Frankism was an 18th-century radical, antinomian Jewish messianic movement founded by Jacob Frank, stemming from the earlier Sabbatean movement of Shabbatai Tzvi, that preached transgression of Jewish law (Torah) to achieve spiritual purification, embracing behaviors like incest, orgies, and public anti-Judaism, believing the messianic age inverted all rules; Frankists were excommunicated by rabbis and many eventually converted en masse to Catholicism, integrating aspects of Kabbalah, Christianity, and esoteric thought.

Key Aspects of Frankism

Origin & Founder: A continuation of the Sabbatean movement (followers of Shabbatai Tzvi) in Eastern Europe, led by Jacob Frank (1726-1791).

Core Beliefs: The messianic era required turning the world upside down, requiring followers to break traditional moral boundaries and embrace forbidden acts (like incest) to reach spiritual heights, a concept called antinomianism.

Practices: Included scandalous sexual rituals, public opposition to rabbinic Judaism, and adopting Christian elements, often involving public displays of defiance.

Relationship to Sabbateanism: Frank claimed to be a reincarnation of Shabbatai Tzvi, continuing the hidden, mystical path of Sabbateanism but with more overt, shocking practices.

Conversion: After public scandals and rabbinic condemnation, Frank led his followers to convert to Catholicism in large numbers, blending Jewish mysticism with Christian forms and Western esotericism, notes Oxford Academic and Wikipedia.

Sabbateanism (The Parent Movement)

Centered on the 17th-century Turkish rabbi Shabbatai Zvi, who claimed to be the Messiah.

Sabbateans also believed the messianic age inverted the law, but often operated more secretly (crypto-Jews/Dönme) after Zvi's conversion to Islam, which Frankism made public and extreme, says Wikipedia and Museum of the Jewish People.
